The specific focus on this study is the migrant women and their survival strategies in the place of destination. Most of the studies in migration are gender blind i.e. researchers and social scientists are interested to study about migration of men and impact of male migration on the female who are left behind in their native place. But women migration is also an important phenomenon and migration is considered by them as a strategy for survival.

I owe a deep sense of gratitude to Prof. Samita Manna, my respected teacher and guide who has encouraged and motivated me to think about the problem and provided me invaluable assistance during the course of my work. I also express my sincere thanks for her comments and suggestions at every stage in the process of doing this work. Her valuable insight and guidance have been of great help in producing, modifying and making this work presentable. I am also indebted to Prof. Surya Kanti Banerjee, ex-reader, department of Political Science, Presidency College, Kolkata for his kind advice during the initial phase of my study.

This study is done completely by my own fund. For this reason, sometimes, I have to face financial problem but yet I am able to overcome this problem. Major portion of my vacation and holidays have been utilized for establishing contacts with the people of Jogendra Nath colony which have helped me to collect data. Various types of data have been collected, scrutinized and processed with the untiring perseverance of my respected teacher Dr. Samita Manna.

I am also thankful to Ajoy Pal who provided his invaluable time in data processing and typing. Thanks are also due to all the migrant women of Jogendra Nath colony who are my respondents of this dissertation for their co-operation. They have extended their hands to know about their various types of problems and their survival strategies in the place of destination. I also take the opportunity to convey my gratitude to all those persons with whom I was in constant touch not only in the college but also during my field study. I express my gratitude to my friends and colleagues who have spent their valuable time in getting my various questions cleared.

The present work is divided into seven chapters. The first chapter is Introduction, the second chapter is Research Design or methodology adopted for this work. The third chapter is The Setting which depicts the history of the origin and development of the colony, the fourth chapter is on Survival Strategy which describes about the various types of strategies adopted by the migrant women for their survival in the place of destination. The fifth chapter is Migrants and Their Level of Living depicts the picture about the level of living of the migrant people in the place of origin. The sixth chapter is Tension, Conflict and Violence which gives picture about the nature of conflict, tension and violence among the migrants, the last chapter is Conclusion that ends with a note on the importance of this study.

A sweet and special thanks should be given to our son Agnidipta who is much considerate for her working mother. I also express my deepest sense of gratitude to my family members particularly to my husband Shri Arunansu Ray for his contribution to my career building.
