Acknowledgement

It has often been difficult for me to acknowledge the intellectual debts I owe to so many people. I owe my greatest debt to my supervisor Prof. Saraswati Raju who right from the inception of the topic of the research helped me develop the initial ideas and thereafter continued to offer her intellectual generosity, kept nudging and encouraging chinning up during those moments of despair every researcher is familiar with. I must admit that I tested her patience to the extreme limits, but she was untiring in her critical and constructive comments including the language and style of my presentation, which tremendously improved the final outcome. Thanks ever so much Professor for your constant guidance and caring attitude towards me that elevates you to the level that transcends much beyond being a thesis supervisor. Ma’m, I will never be able to repay for your kind endeavours.

I do have specific debts and it gives me great pleasure in acknowledging them. I am deeply grateful to Prof. P. M. Kulkarni for his exactitude in explaining methodological complexities with admirable patience. I also thank you sir for being present at all my presentations related to Ph. D. and providing suggestions at every step, which provided a formal elegance to my work.

I also wish to take this opportunity to thank the members of my advisory committee - to Prof. Ravi Srivastava for his critical comments during the formative period of my thesis and to Prof. B. S. Butola for his support.

Our dear teacher and the Dean of School of Social Sciences, Prof. Amitabh Kundu, has been a constant source of inspiration and I thank him for being available for his help.

My sincere thanks are due to Dr. Sucharita Sen for her moral and emotional support, to Dr. Sinha for his critical observations and to Prof. Sudesh Nangia for her various suggestions. I have also been priviledged to have all sorts of logistic and academic support from Dr. Milap Chand Sharma. I also thank Dr. Dipen Nath Das and Prof. R. K. Sharma for their guidance and help. I owe my academic growth to Profs. M H Qureshi, Murlidhar Vemuri and Harjit Singh and Dr. Anuradha Banerjee and I thank them all. Drs. Atul Sood, Deepak Mishra and Padmini Pani have always been there providing support.

I would be failing if I do not acknowledge Prof. G K Chadha who has been a great inspiration for all of us. I extend my thanks to him for his moral support.

It gives me an immense pleasure to offer my sincere thanks to Mr. Vergheses for helping me understand the computer cartography and helping with maps. Mr. Selvam, a recent member of the CSRD extended help in crucial hours at the
The final stage of the thesis. It is difficult to name every individual. I would like to place my thanks for the office staff including in-charges of various labs and the library in the Centre.

I am deeply grateful to various persons in the Registrar General’s Office for help in procuring data and ward-level maps of Delhi available for the first time in 2001. Without their support completing this thesis would have been a difficult task.

This work would have not acquired its present shape without the unconditional support from friends such as Elumalai for helping with the statistical tools, Paromita Sarkar and Swati Sachdev for assistance during the final stages of the thesis, Mondira Bhattacharya, Aradhana Srivastava for emotional support, Saswati Paik, Sharmishta, Gloria, Sreosi Gupta, Shweta, Amit, Rakesh, Rajesh, Anshu, Vinita Yadav, Shadab Khan, Aditi and Arindam Mukherji for constant support and words of encouragement. My thanks.

Veenu Tripathi warrants a special mention as someone fabulous, always there to provide help whenever I needed it particularly for reading the final proofs.

The Indian Council for Social Science Research (ICSSR), New Delhi provided crucial financial support. Prof. Bhat was instrumental in drawing my attention to this grant. I thank him for it.

Mr. Manoj Rai, although distantly placed provided all possible support to complete this task. My debt to my parents, my sister Jaya and brothers Mayank and Malay and my nephew Anshuman cannot be summed up in words.

Last, but not the least I am extremely grateful to my respondents in the study area. I encroached upon their personal spaces, time and energies unashamedly and they were amongst the most gracious hosts I have ever known. My thanks are due to them.

There may be others whom I missed out, but let me assure all such persons that it is inadvertent and I seek their forgiveness.
