A great deal of labour, time and effort goes into the writing of a thesis. The task is a long and lonely one, moreso for me, because of the many interruptions that came in-between. During this period, I was fortunate to receive the support and invaluable guidance of my Professor and guide, Dr. (Mrs.) Suma Chitnis. There were times when I virtually gave up but because of the patience shown by her and the encouragement that she constantly gave, I was spurred on to complete this work.

Working with Mrs. Chitnis has been a challenging experience and I have benefited tremendously from the clarity of her thinking. Her comments and insights provided direction at critical junctures. The standards she set were always high and at times it was quite demanding. However, in retrospect, one feels satisfied for having a research guide who was able to make this experience a rewarding one. To her I owe my deepest affection and gratitude.

I will always remember with love, my friends, Roda Billimoria and Padma Velaskar, for the warmth of their friendship and the strength and support that they gave me.

There are many people whom I would like to thank but some deserve a special mention:

I would like to take this opportunity of thanking Shankuntala Goel who used to regularly accompany me to the Municipal School and act as interpreter.

My deep appreciation to Anil D'Souza, Harmindar and Guneet Rana, who helped me put order, when I was caught in a maze of data.

I would like to thank Mr. J.C. Sharma and Mr. P. Salvi of the Electronic Data Processing Unit of the Tata Institute of Social Sciences, for the assistance they gave me, whenever required.

A special thanks to Shyamala Rajagopalan and her colleagues for the cheerful assistance they provided in the library.

I am truly grateful to my sister-in-law, Rita Britto, for her precision, neatness and speed in typing the final draft of the thesis.

My gratitude goes to the principals, teachers, parents and students of the three schools because of whose co-operation, this thesis was possible.

My warm appreciation to my Mom and Dad, on whose prompting I undertook to do this thesis and who sacrificed many vacations to look after my children thus freeing me to devote the much needed time.

Last but not least, a special "Thank-you" to my husband Joe and my children Tarun and Kavita, who for many years lived in the shadow of the thesis, without complaining.

vi
