

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

The concern that millions of Indian farmers spending most of their lifetime in hard conditions of farming are not able to make a reasonable living out of it had been a constant source of inspiration to explore the various ailments of our agriculture. This thesis is the result of such a research project. For completion of this work I have got the support of many. Prof. Ramesh C. Datta, Department of Personnel Management and Industrial Relations, TISS, Mumbai as Research Guide had devoted his whole hearted help throughout the study since its conception. Amidst his busy schedule of classes, project works, research commitments both in India and abroad, he has allotted time for innumerable number of discussions at various stages of the study. I place on record my deep sense of gratitude and complete indebtedness to him.

The co-operation extended by staff of the Directorate of Cotton Development, Ministry of Agriculture, Government of India, Office of the Textile Commissioner, Government of India, East India Cotton Association, Indian Cotton Mills Federation and Central Institute for Research on Cotton Technology (CIRCOT), Mumbai and Central Institute for Cotton Research (CICR), Nagpur in collection of the literature and data for the study are gratefully acknowledged. I will be failing in my duty if I don't put on record my sincere gratitude to all the farmers in Amaravati and Nagpur Districts whom I contacted for data collection.

I am thankful to my friend and colleague, Dr.K.J.S.Satya Sai, who took pains to read the manuscript overnight and make valuable suggestions. I also use this occasion to thank all my friends and colleagues whose best wishes were always an inspiration.

Collection of primary data from 240 farmers was a herculean task for a person who is not conversant in local language. In this respect I wish to acknowledge the help extended by Shri.K.B.Malkhede, Shri. Sanjay Nayse and his father and brother staying at Amaravati and express sincere gratitude to them.

This study would not have been completed in the busy schedules of home and office life in Mumbai but for the constant persuasion of my wife Girija who was responsible for putting me back on track on several occasions of drift. In the process, my daughters Bala and Krishna had to compromise by avoiding several hours of playing together with me. I have to put on record my gratitude to my wife and my daughters.

I thank my organisation for giving the necessary permission to pursue my Ph.D work on part-time basis.
