ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

This study would have been impossible without the invaluable assistance of Mr Rodesh Karigapsa. Mr Karigapsa served as my scout, finding and suggesting knowledgeable older Dimasas I could talk to, as my translator for those discussions, and as interpreter by very patiently filling me in on the many mystifying aspects of what I heard. Two other young Dimasas, Mr Ajoy Warisa and Mr Bharat Langthasa, were tireless in suggesting and arranging younger Dimasas for me to talk to. Much of the research for the initial part of this study and the interviews were done from a base at Tularam Memorial-Good Shepherd School, a Jesuit institution in Gunjung, Dima Hasao. The warm hospitality of Rev Charles D'Souza, S. J. and Rev William Pinto, S. J., the teaching brothers and religious sisters there, and the entire staff made my stays there most enjoyable.

This study is very much a product of the many young and old Dimasas who were generous with their time. Older Dimasas provided their knowledge and wisdom about traditional religious material. Younger Dimasas graciously agreed to discuss their unique approaches to that worldview and those customs. They all must remain unnamed, but are by no means unappreciated.

Of great importance was the support, both financial and emotional, of Rev Arul Susaimanickam, S. J., Regional Superior of the Jesuits of the Kohima Region. He generously invited me to the Region to undertake this research and insisted on meeting all expenses. Truth be told, all of the Jesuit priests, brothers and scholastics of North East India and elsewhere have been unreasonably generous in extending their friendship and support during my time here. I am deeply grateful as well to Rev Thomas Lawler, S. J., Provincial Superior of the Wisconsin Province of the Society of Jesus who trustingly missioned me to this work despite so many challenges. A.M.D.G.
My work was sponsored by the North East Social Research Centre of Guwahati, Assam, under the direction of Dr Melvil Pereira. Part of their mission is to support social research in the North East, and they were gracious in inviting me as a visiting scholar. Their library, unequalled in scope and quality on Northeast India, served throughout as a source for needed information. Their office also provided the means for the statistical analysis of the questionnaires that form an important leg of the study. The entire staff of the Centre were unfailingly welcoming and helpful.

I am deeply grateful to Dr Alphonsus D'Souza who generously agreed to serve as my guide for this research. His friendship, his willingness to discuss various aspects of the work, and even more his unfailing optimism and encouragement were essential to its success.

Special thanks also to Fr (Dr) Stephen Mavely Vice-Chancellor/President of Assam Don Bosco University, Dr J N Vishwakarma, Director of Research, and Dr Basil S Koikara, University Registrar, and Dr Dominic Meyieho of the Department of North East India Studies. They generously accepted the proposal of a superannuated PhD candidate to the university and have displayed an avid and encouraging interest throughout the course of research. Of course I cannot forget my classmates of the Second Batch at A.D.B.U.

Finally, my gratitude to my family, particularly to my father who sadly passed to God in the midst of this project, and to whom this work is dedicated. My brothers and their families provided constant encouragement and, more importantly, sincere belief during very difficult times, as did my friends and Jesuit brothers. Is that everyone? Certainly not. To those I have overlooked, my thanks as well.
