ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

‘Soli deo gloria!’

To God alone be the glory! For He guided me in the way of wisdom, led me through unfamiliar territory, made the rough places smooth, turned the darkness into light before me, and made my journey easier.

This dissertation has taken shape with the guidance and support of a number of persons. First, I must acknowledge more debts than can be briefly stated to Dr. V. Nithyanantha Bhat, my Research Guide and Supervisor. I am deeply grateful to him for the advice and support that guided this endeavour from its inception. He read the many drafts with the kind of generously scrupulous attention every student hopes to receive. He has been a model of patience, kindness and encouragement, and his contribution of suggestions and criticism has greatly enhanced the study.

I extend my heartfelt gratitude to Fr. Murray Bodo OFM (Cincinnati, Ohio), Denise Levertov’s spiritual mentor and friend for over twenty years, for corresponding with me, and for answering questions related to my research.

Of comparable value has been the help and advice of Rev. Dr. Philips Wadakkekalam, Head and Professor, Department of English, and Rev. Dr. Jose Thalody, Dean, Pontifical Institute of Theology and Philosophy, of St. Joseph’s Pontifical Seminary, Mangalapuzha, as well as Rev. Dr. James Anaparambil, President, Pontifical Institute of Theology and Philosophy, and Rev. Dr. Selvister Ponnumuthan, Rector, of St. Joseph’s Pontifical Seminary, Carmelgiri. I express my gratitude to them for answering my questions and clarifying my doubts concerning religion, theology and philosophy. I take pleasure in thanking Rev. Fr. Abraham Pallivathukkal, Fr. Joseph Kuncherath, and Fr. Mathew Kilukkan who supported me with their pastoral care and prayers.

My thanks go to Sr. Christabelle, Principal, St. Teresa’s College, for granting me leave from teaching to avail the Teacher Fellowship (for which I am indebted to the UGC), and for her prayerful support. I sincerely thank Dr. Winny Varghese, Principal, M. A. College, Kothamangalam, for his gracious help. I am grateful to Mr. Paul Mathew, Head of the Department of English, M. A. College, and wish to acknowledge my appreciation for his generosity, ready help, and friendly support.

Many friends and colleagues have cheered me on in one way or another. I wish to indicate my sincere appreciation to my colleagues in St. Teresa’s College for their invaluable help: particular thanks are due to Dr. Renuka S., Head of the Department of English (for her loving concern and encouragement), Dr. Lakshmi Devi Menon (for her friendly support) and Mrs. Nirmala Padmanabhan (for her timely help). It is a pleasure to acknowledge the encouragement accorded by Mrs. Jayanthi Gopakumar, Mrs. Mary Teresa Fernandez, Mrs. Jessy Job (above all for her painstaking proofreading), Mrs. Rosamma Tomy and Mrs. Annie Mathew, former Heads of the Department of English. I earnestly thank Prof. P.C. James, of St. Berchmans’ College, Changanacherry, who instilled in me a love for American poetry and Dickinson in particular. I express my sincere appreciation to all my friends in the Jesus Youth for their fervent prayers and timely help. I also thank Beebijan and Manjusha for their assistance on the home front.
I am grateful to the librarians of ASRC, Hyderabad and St. Teresa’s College for their help. I owe thanks as well to my friend Alex Edezhath, librarian of the Washington State University Library, who was constantly available to provide essential books and materials. I thank him specially for introducing me to Nicholas O’Connell who had a final interview with Denise Levertov just a few months before her death.

My mother Accamma Job, my first and best teacher, and my parents-in-law Prof. Sunny Thomas and Prof. Josamma Sunny, my role models, are my biggest blessing. I thank them for lovingly accompanying me as I pursued my dream with their encouragement and prayers.

My husband Manoj has been my greatest strength and a source of never-ceasing inspiration: he has edited my very life. To him I owe the technical competence, space of time and peace of mind to do my research and I thank him for his unswerving support and prudent counsel.

My sons Joel and Mario have shared time with this work as a kind of third child. They were always eager to ask, “How’s your thesis coming along?” and to pray for me. But most of all, they have enabled me to understand more deeply the sense of what Dickinson meant when she told a friend, “I find ecstasy in living – the mere sense of living is joy enough.” I thank them for bringing me “ecstasy in living” and joy beyond measure.

I dedicate this study to the memory of my beloved father K. V. Job who put a dream in my heart, and whose life of integrity and faith continues to inspire me.
