Acknowledgement

A doctoral program is a course like no other. It involves struggles and joys of a very distinct kind where one’s work and life seem to merge into one. It is only appropriate that I acknowledge those whose contributions and support have helped me come this far in my own doctoral journey.

I am indebted to all the caregivers who participated in my study, especially the intervention participants, for they truly made my work what it is today.

To have worked under the supervision of my guide, Dr. D. Dhanalakshmi, has been my most intensive learning experience. Her relentless pursuit of learning, emphasis on quality and painstaking guidance are the driving forces of my work.

My doctoral committee advisors, Dr. Nalini.R and Dr. Sibnath Deb have contributed valuably at each step of my work. I extend my heartfelt gratitude to them for their time, interest and encouragement.

One of the most insightful parts of my doctoral study involved interacting with people who have worked in this field and were willing to share their knowledge. I am extremely grateful to Dr. Peter Houts (Professor Emeritus, Penn State University), who originally developed the intervention module used in the study. I sincerely thank Dr. Susan McMillan (Distinguished University Health Professor, University of South Florida), for sharing the COPE model with related literature and for promptly replying to my queries with sound advice. I thank Dr. V. D. Swaminathan (Professor, Madras University) and Dr K.K. Choudhury (Senior Scientist, Indian Statistical Institute, Bangalore) for sharing with me their knowledge and expertise. It truly enabled me to battle the practical concerns that arose and to add quality to my work.

I thank Dr. Gift Norman and Dr. Saro Thomas at Bangalore Baptist Hospital as well as Dr. B.S. Srinath and Dr. Shashirekha at Shree Shankara Cancer Hospital and Research Centre for making it possible for me to interact with caregivers in their wards. This study would not have been possible without their cooperation.
This acknowledgement also gives me the opportunity to place on record my gratitude to the teaching staff, non-teaching staff and scholars of the Dept. of Applied Psychology, Pondicherry University for their support and encouragement.

I have been fortunate to be surrounded by people who really understood what this course meant to me and who supported me in my endeavour from behind the scenes.

I would like to thank my mother for being all the reasons and all the inspiration that one could ask for. I extend a very special thank you to my sister, whose whimsical sense of humour and zest for life make up for all the rainy days. My unreasonably proud grandmother, aunt and cousins have been a constant source of joy. I thank my father for his interest and encouragement.

I thank my seniors and colleagues in the Dept. of Psychology, Mount Carmel College, Bangalore for their encouragement and support, especially as I approached the final stages of my work. I sincerely thank Soumya for taking on the work of formatting my dissertation as though it was her own. My students, Lidia and Rayani, have been phenomenal with their help.

I am grateful to my fellow scholars Aneesh, Rayees, Jwmwi, Anjali, Shinto, Alphonsa, Anila and Avuni for sharing their doctoral journeys with me. I would like to also thank Pavitra, Ayan and Riju, for the times when learning was truly fun.

I thank Ramya, for the interesting conversations about psychology, research and life that never cease to amaze; Noireeta, for transcending disciplinary boundaries to help me source literature and for her all-pervading enthusiasm; Zulfiqaar, for what can only be termed as unconditional love and support and Vishal, for being my greatest lender of perspective, my relational home.

I reserve the last thank you for Sandeep, for lending new meaning to the phrase “being there” - in all these years, in more ways that I could have asked for and in his typical understated manner.
