To my mastermind and life-coach, my late father Mr. Ranjit Kumar Dey, I owe it all to him; I lost him within the period of five years long commitment to research. Though I missed the most secure place to fall back and his inspiration and scolding but I believe he stood beside me paving the way so smoothly. In this course of journey, I had been to a lot of life events where my one and half years old little daughter, Tathoi deserves special mention. My little heart and my research are like siblings together adjusting between themselves in time schedules and priorities and attachment. Her adaptations and silent adjustments made me speechless! I must also give appreciation to my husband, Neel, who for the most part, had the most difficult role to play as he endured the thousand hours of daily chores in which I was absent and valiantly dealt with the emotional shockwaves through the whole process. ‘Neel! Your logical support and strength made the entire journey possible!’

My brother being himself intellectually unfortunate had always been my drive to the research and my mother the most stand by person to hold on the continuous momentum of the research process. Thanking you all can’t really express the true value, but my gratitude to all of you is immense and without your indirect participation I could not have been made this!

I wish to extend my appreciation to (Prof) Dr. Mallika Banerjee my mentor and philosopher who provided immense support and guidance at the best to undertake the study and never lost faith in me. She had been sometimes my role model and always been a chief source of encyclopedia in autism. ‘Ma’am! If possible pardon me for all the foolishness I exhibited and agony that bothered you from my part, unwillingly’.

Department of Psychology in University of Calcutta had been always a unit to support me where all the faculties, my classmates, my senior and junior associates and fellow researchers were in the move to their best whenever required. Special mention to my associates Aneswa and Nandini for their selfless efforts to provide support whenever necessary. For them the research became a happening, indeed!
A very special gratitude goes out to all the special institutions and their special educators and coordinators, from where I selected research participants namely Pradip centre of Autism Management, Noble Mission, Uttoron, and Paediatric centre of Apollo Gleneagles Hospital, and APPA. I extend my special thanks to the participants’ parents who extended their corporation throughout the process.

And finally, last but by no means least, my daughter’s nanny who had been a great saviour of babysitting and household chores!

Above all, I owe it all to Almighty for granting me the freedom of thinking, wisdom, health and strength to undertake this task and enabling me to its completion.

I am privileged and overwhelmed with emotion. Thanking you all...
