ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

I am glad to express my deep gratitude to my guide and supervisor Prof. G. Palanithurai for his immense support throughout the period of research at Gandhigram Rural Institute. This thesis owes a lot to his confidence on me especially during the final stages of the work. Prof. Palanithurai has consistently made me to focus on the output of the research considering my exploratory nature. I am extremely thankful to professor for making me to realise this work.

I thank my co-guide Dr R. Kumaran, Asst. Professor, Department of Sociology, Gandhigram Rural Institute who spent his valuable time to listen, read and comment on my write-ups. I extend my gratitude to Prof. N. Sivanna, Institute of Socio-Economic Change, Bangalore who is my Doctoral Committee member for his solid contribution and assessments on the research work. It’s my pleasure to express my sincere thanks to Dr. Ragupathy, Professor and Head, Dr. Nakkeeran, Professor of Department of Political Science and other members of the faculty for their support and solidarity during the period of research. The support of faculties in Department of Political Science helped to ease out my anxieties and engage on the research with focus as one of the part-time scholars.

I thank the Gandhigram Rural Institute for having given me this opportunity and the institutional support to carry out this research. I also thank my organisation ROOTS for having provided the necessary conditions and administrative support to conduct the research.

I thank all the respondents, the rural women of Thiruvannmalai and Salem and their kind co-operation and consent during my field work. Specifically, I express my gratitude to Ms. Rajammal of Thiruvannmalai and Ms. JayamMohankumar of Salem and their team members and family members for their relentless support throughout the research and helping me to complete the field research on time.

I also express my deep gratitude to Dr. Vijayabaskar, Professor of Department of Economics, Madras Institute of Development Studies for providing his immense support to study literature available in the Institute and challenging me with his questions on the empirical nature of the research from Economic Empowerment angle.
I thank Prof. K. Sathyamurthy, Madras School of Social Work for his feedback on the research questionnaire from statistical perspective and Prof. Uma Gengaiah, Indira Gandhi Open University from Women’s Studies perspective and Dr. Rajalakshmi, Management Studies expert from Anna University on methodology of presentation of the research. Without their support it wouldn’t have been possible to complete the final report. With all the multi-disciplinary interactions and contributions of above academicians from various disciplines, I believe that the research has become more satisfactory and qualitative. I thank everyone of them from my heart for making this final thesis possible.

Throughout my research journey, I interacted with many social workers and women’s rights leaders from the grassroots level to macro policy analysts and I thank all of them, particularly Ms. Sivagami, IAS (Retd), Ms. Burnad Fatima, Convener of Tamil Nadu Women’s Forum, Ms. Saroja Kumar and Ms. Sivagami of Tamil Nadu Women Farmers Federation, Ms. Esther Mariasevlam, Regional Director, ActionAid India for their quality interactions on farming, gender and dalit women land rights perspectives.

I extend my sincere thanks to my fellow researchers at Gandhigram, Ashok Mathew, Nirmala, Aarthi, Siva, Dr. Sathyaraj, George, Deivaparakash, Sivakumar, Umarani, Gandhimathi and Ms. Sangeetha, for their interactions, support and solidarity to my research work.

I thank my colleagues, Arivazhagan Rayan, Christuraj, Ramesh Prakash Velu, Savitha for their energetic interactions and Ms. Padmavathi, who helped in initial data analysis. With their constant motivation and support I came through the research.

I thank my husband Sathish and my daughter Sandhya Stephan who have borne all the pressures and keep me free all through these years that enabled me to engage in this research without hassle.
