Acknowledgement

There are several people I must thank for helping me give this thesis its final shape. Though it is just not possible to name all those who haunt memories of learning and growing up.

First, I would like to express my deep and sincere gratitude to my supervisors, Professor Sumantro Mukherjee and Professor Anjan Chakrabarti for their support and encouragement at different stages of the thesis. To Sumantro-da, I owe the confidence to think through my ideas and the inspiration to move on when everything seemed absolutely hopeless. To Anjan-da I am grateful for raising questions at important junctures and thereby ensuring a degree of rigour in my work.

I thank all my teachers and staffs at the Department of Geography, Visva-Bharati for being one of the excellent academic spaces to have nurtured my thought-world. I also thank Professor Guruprasad Chattopadhyay, Head, Department of Geography, Visva-Bharati for supporting me in most of my endeavours. I warmly thank Dr. Krishnendu Gupta, Assistant Professor, Department of Geography, Visva-Bharati, for his valuable advice and friendly help. His extensive discussions around my work and interesting explorations in field-work have been very helpful for this study. I thank the staff at the Central Library at the Visva-Bharati.

For Dr Anup Kumar Dhar, I can only express a gratitude for the senses of respect, admiration and friendship that his being emanates. My thoughts, and a large segment of the processes of my becoming, continue to attempt resonating with his. It might be somewhat embarrassing for the author to remember all the insights and turns of thinking Anup-da has provided for this dissertation.

I fondly remember the interactions with those friends in the Sanhati collective – Anup Kumar Dhar, Anjan Chakrabarti, Arup Dhali, Arpita Bandyopadhyay, Asha Achuthan, Nirmal Saha Partha Chakrabarty, Ranjita Biswas, Tapas Das and others – the subsequent corrosions in relationships with whom have never been enough to erase the sense of enrichment, elation and respect that we shared.

Dr. Debaprasad Bandyopadhyay had always been more than a caring, intelligent and understanding friend and continues to have confidence in and a critical engagement with my work. His convictions lent vital support at difficult moments.
I gratefully acknowledge the academic role performed by Sri Somasis Sengupta that made my Ph.D. work possible.

My warm thanks are due to Professor Swapan Kumar Bhattacharyya and Dr Gayatri Bhattacharyya who directed me in Indian Sociology. Their kind support and guidance have been of great value in this study.

Special thanks to Suvradip Dasgupta for agreeing so readily not just to help in English translations but also to review it and help me rewrite major portion.

Special loving greetings to ‘Dida’ (Smt Nilima Talukdar) whose mad appreciation for my alleged qualities shall continue to support me in rougher times.

My Parents as well as father-in-law and mother-in-law eagerly and impatiently waited for this thesis to end. My in-laws put the word ‘laws’ under erasure, I remain grateful to them.

To Manali, for constantly exhorting me to finish my work on the “harmonium”, but also for believing that I would, one day, finish it, for all the impromptu entertainment sessions that made the harmonium bearable at the worst of times.

My beloved brothers (Rajarshi Ghosh), (Soumbha Talukdar) and sister (Poulomi Talukdar) are always my source of inspiration. The word ‘thank you’ is not good enough for them.

To my extended family residing at Yarrow Co-operative Housing Society, for believing against all odds in the significance of what I might be doing, for providing that safe space that made coming home worthwhile.

To Sisir Kaku (Sisir Subhra Roy Chowdhury) and Indrani-baudi (Indrani Dasgupta), for their interest, for their hand-holding, for their help and for listening so attentively to all my “gyan” on Ph.D. thesis.

At the end, and most importantly, I dedicate this work to Prof Ajit Chaudhury, who has in his quiet but certain way provided the belief and strength to attempt to move worlds.
