

Acknowledgement

The most difficult part of the work is citing the acknowledgements. Indeed this is an effort encompassing my professional career in the oil industry for the last 20 years. During this period, I have come across many towering and eminent personalities in the industry who have shared their learning, experiences and knowledge with me. They initiated me to the business world of Energy. I had the opportunity to interact with many foreign nationals in the field and interactions with them made me respect my fellow professionals and countrymen all the more. The people with whom I work as a public sector employee, made me realize that the work ethics and knowledge which the oil industry in India has, is one of the best in the world. The constraints, both physical and financial under which they perform, make the performance really stellar. They all have contributed in making of this work a reality. I thank all of them, the known and the unknown.

My guide, Professor V. P. Bharadwaj, Former Head, Department of Economics and Former Director, School of Social Sciences, Gujarat University, Ahmedabad has been my teacher since post graduate studies. I have been indebted to him in not one but in many ways. He has been instrumental in fostering the relentless desire in me to question, probe, explore, experiment and discuss situations and issues in open without fear. He is a true teacher- silent, composed, observing, nurturing, questioning, teaching and explaining the concepts till they are crystal clear in your mind. What awes me is his great patience with his students and never a word discouraging them. He has throughout in this work provided invaluable suggestions and constructive criticisms to make the work more meaningful.

I also wish to thank my various business acquaintances, trade representatives and industry members who have provided me with field data and various inputs to complete this work. A special thanks to my friend Shri Chetan Shah for acquainting me with the intricacies of the local market of Gujarat.

I wish to thank my mother Mrs Molly Basu and father Shri Asutosh Basu who have always encouraged me to undertake new challenges and assignments in life. Their blessings and good wishes have indeed guided me throughout.

I do also acknowledge the contribution of my son Aditya who has been of invaluable help in organizing the drafts and editing and printing of the manuscripts. My sister-in-law Goral also deserves special thanks for her helpful suggestions in the manuscripts.

In the end, I wish to thank my wife Darsha who is an academician and accomplished person herself in her field for the constant support she has provided me in my efforts.

Ahmedabad

June 2, 2011

Amitabh Basu