ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

This dissertation is the product of a strong desire to be a historian and also the labour of many who have supported me throughout to fulfill this desire of mine. I take this opportunity to acknowledge their generous help and support with a deep sense of gratitude.

First and foremost, I thank Almighty God for bringing me this far and guiding me all the way.

It has been a privilege to be a student of Prof Shahid Amin who graciously acquiesced to supervise this dissertation. This dissertation has benefited immensely from his sharp observations and critical comments. I also acknowledge his help in my gaining access to some of the sources used herein with an ease which is reserved exclusively for the students of a widely acknowledged and highly appreciated scholar. I, for one, have learned lessons to last a lifetime in the field of research and teaching for which I shall remain indebted to him.

I thank my teachers in Sri Venkateswara College (Dr Anita Nahal Arya, Dr Anshu Malhotra, Dr Biswamoy Pati, Dr I Thirumali, Dr Jaya Sinha Tyagi, and Dr Nirmal Kumar). My keenness to pursue higher studies in this subject, and also this profession owes a lot to the interesting classes and the highly intellectual environment I was exposed to there.

It is the two years in the Department of History, University of Delhi, which I have enjoyed the most as a student, especially in the final year of post-graduation where I was taught by the teachers whose example I wish to emulate in my career as well. I must specifically mention— Prof Amar Farooqui, Prof Basudev Chatterji, Dr Dilip Menon, and Dr Prabhu Mohapatra. It is to Prof Shahid Amin and Dr Anshu Malhotra, however, that I owe a special intellectual debt: Prof Shahid Amin (for the course on nationalism with the most wonderful set of readings, the first exposure to archival records as part of the internal assessment assignment in MA final year itself, and of course, that one fantastic class on Partition and Independence which started it all), and Dr Anshu Malhotra, (for her generous advice and guidance at all times). I sincerely thank all my teachers with an utmost sense of gratitude.
Apart from my teachers in the ‘Modern India’ faculty, I also acknowledge the help and support of Prof Upinder Singh (my MPhil course coordinator but more importantly a teacher who truly encouraged me to speak up in the discussion classes in MPhil course 1), Prof B P Sahu (under whose tenure as Head-of-Department I got my Teaching Assistantship), Prof Jafri (Head-of-Department for the greater part of my tenure as Teaching Assistant), and, Prof Basudev Chatterji (Head-of Department in the final year of my Teaching Assistantship and also for his generous advice at several occasions). I also thank Prof R C Thakaran under whose tenure as Head-of-Department I now submit my thesis.

I acknowledge wholeheartedly the vision behind the most generous scheme of funding introduced in the University of Delhi—the University Teaching Assistantship—and feel extremely proud to be among the first recipients of this ingenious scheme of aiding research in my home university. Further, it is only because of the kind cooperation and support extended by all the teachers of my Department that research remained the topmost (and in fact the only) priority for us, the newly recruited first batch of Teaching Assistants. I acknowledge gratefully this kind gesture of all the teachers in the Department of History, University of Delhi.

I also had the opportunity to interact with teachers outside the Department. First, I acknowledge with utmost sincerity the very significant contribution of Dr Joya Chatterji to this project. I have benefited immensely by the long discussions I have had with her regarding sources and perspectives for which I thank her most sincerely. I thank the others who too, at various points have enriched my knowledge on the subject with their experience, invaluable suggestions, and points of critique as well. In Kolkata, I wish to thank sincerely Prof Atis Das Gupta (Director General, West Bengal State Archives) for all his generous help in the WBSA, for sparing valuable time and pointing out to further sources in the Police Archives, and also for kindly providing me important contacts for fieldwork. I also thank Prof Gautam Bhadra who being the ever extremely helpful teacher introduced me to the vast Bengali literature on the subject, and provided the most valuable points of critique as well. Dr Manas Ray was extremely prompt in his advice and in also providing me with all the help required for the fieldwork in Kolkata. I thank Dr Sudeshna Banerjee for not only pointing out the most valuable repository of source
This dissertation has also benefited from the never ending support and the lighter moments provided by my friends. I specifically acknowledge the reassuring presence of materials for this dissertation—the Refugee Relief and Rehabilitation Department—but also ensuring that I get immediate access to the resources there. Finally, I thank Dr Subashri Ghosh, who has helped me not only with words of encouragement and support, but even graciously parted with her own collection of source materials which I had tried hard to locate but had failed to do so.

In Delhi, I have benefited greatly from my interactions with Dr Gargi Chakravartty, Dr Nonica Datta and Dr Debjani Sengupta. It was through the very kind efforts of Prof Nandita Basu and Dr Amitava Chakravarty (and the teachers in the Modern Indian Language Department, University of Delhi) that I learnt to read and write in my mother tongue—Bengali! A special word of thanks to Shri Amitabh Mukhopadhyay (Joint Secretary at Parliament of India) for granting me ease of access to the Parliament Library, New Delhi. I also thank Dr Ayesha Kidwai for so kindly pointing out to the Photo Division Archives from where I have collected the rare photographs used in this thesis. I sincerely thank Shri Debatosh Sengupta, (Director, Photo Division, Ministry of Information and Broadcasting) for granting me instant access to the required photographs. Finally, I thank Shri Suresh Kumar very sincerely for so kindly drawing the perfect maps used in this thesis.

I now acknowledge the support of the administrative staff in my chief areas of research. In Delhi, I feel privileged to have had access to the rich collection of books in the Partha Sarthi Gupta Library (History Department, University of Delhi) and the Central Library (University of Delhi) and thank the staff therein, specially Vijaya Madam (PSG Library). I also thank the very efficient staff at the National Archives of India, the congenial staff at the Manuscript section in the Nehru Memorial Museum and Library (specially my dear friend Saumya and Neelam Madam), and the staff at the Delhi State Archives. In Kolkata, I thank the staff at the West Bengal State Archives (Writers Building and Shakespeare Sarani), National Library, the CSSSC library and Archive, and also the School of Women’s Studies Library (Jadavpur University, Kolkata). Finally, I thank the many respondents in Delhi and Kolkata who, for me, relived their trauma willingly all over again without any complaint.
my friends from school days— Chanpreet, Geetanjali, Ramneeta, and Roshie. I also thank my friends in the Department (Akansha, Ashutosh, Gobina, Madhwi, Mahima, Kanika, Sonal and my senior and friend Dr Madhuri Sharma) for their support, encouragement and the ‘fun time’ spent together; I thank Shilpi specially for so kindly sharing valuable source material from her own thesis.

Finally, it is with utmost gratitude and the highest regard that I now take the opportunity to acknowledge the contribution of those who have silently traveled this long journey with me as a reassuring presence all along.

It is never easy to thank one’s parents enough for we never know where to begin with. Hence, put simply, I thank Bapi and Mamma (Father and Mother) — Dr Shantimoy Chakravarty and Mrs Maya Chakravarty— for being the ones who have guided me through the best and the worst of times. They have not only encouraged me all this while to give my best, but have also taken time out from their busy schedules to assist me in fieldwork. Their belief in me, and the unconditional love and support that I have received from them have been the only propelling factors in this long process of data collection and thesis writing. I thank Bapi and Mamma knowing fully well that words will never be enough, and also fully aware of their prompt response—‘Its parents’ duty!’

I thank Didibhai (elder sister), Priyanka, who has, as a research scholar herself, advised me on many aspects of research and writing. She has been my only true friend all along, much more than a loving and caring sister. I also acknowledge with a deep sense of regard the contribution of Jaibu (my brother-in-law), Dr Saugat Banerjee, who too, took up a keen interest in the progress of this work. At other times, in the last year of research, it is their home that has been my only getaway from the difficult and all-absorbing process of writing and re-writing! I also acknowledge with regards the contribution of Jaibu’s uncle (Shri Anil Banerjee) who most graciously helped me in my fieldwork in Kolkata.

It is impossible to not acknowledge the very warm and generous help extended by my uncle (Mesho) Shri Gautam Mazumder and my aunt (Mashi), Mrs Mausami Mazumder whose home in Kolkata was my workstation for several months, a situation they gladly acquiesced to without any complaint. It is Mashi who has literally held my hand and taught me to negotiate the roads in Kolkata, a debt which is simply difficult to repay. At other times, it was little Somangshu (my cousin) who lightened the moments whenever I felt homesick and wished to return back to my parents.

Finally, my entire family (the Chakravarty’s and the Chatterjee’s) has been the biggest support for me all this while and I wholeheartedly acknowledge their gracious presence in my life. By a word of special mention, I am indebted to my grandparents of whom only my dearest Dida (maternal grandmother, Smt Aruna Chatterjee) survives. Collectively, this dissertation would have been much awaited and highly appreciated by them, especially my beloved Thakuma (paternal grandmother, Smt Jyotsna Chakravarty), for whom Dhaka remained the most beautiful city in the world. Her rich insight would have enriched this dissertation even more.
