ACKNOWLEDGMENT

It was during my Bachelor’s when I had first started to think of doing a Ph. D. Right from the beginning, I had dreamt of doing my Ph. D. in the area of interpersonal relationships. From the inception of this dream to actually achieving it can be rightfully summed up as a journey of joys and sorrows.

The one person who has played a leading role in the achievement of this dream has been, without any doubt, my supervisor, Prof. N. K. Chadha. I was delighted when he had first agreed to take me as his student, which gave me the opportunity to be bestowed upon by his wealth of knowledge and skill. Despite his busy schedule, Prof. Chadha had always been ready to guide me and help me during my doubts and difficulties. His critical as well as encouraging remarks have proved to be more than beneficial during my Ph. D. Being one of the leading psychologists in India, it was truly an honor as well as a pleasure to be doing my Ph. D. under his able guidance. I am extremely thankful and grateful to Prof. Chadha for all his help and guidance in making my Ph. D. a successful venture.

I am also thankful to Prof. Girishwar Misra, Department of Psychology, University of Delhi, who was one of my advisors. Prof. Misra’s astute suggestions and incisive remarks played an important role in enhancing the quality of my research. It was he who had suggested the title of my thesis. I would also like to thank Prof. Sushma Batra, Department of Social Work, University of Delhi, my second advisor, for all her help whenever needed.

I would like to express my heartfelt gratitude to all the people who made a large contribution in my Ph. D. by being the participants of my research. They gave their precious time in order to help me in carrying out my research work. It is very obvious that without their cooperation it would have been impossible for me to complete my research.
Pursuing a Ph. D. can have its own highs and lows. It is the presence of friends, peers, and colleagues that proves to be extremely helpful during many of the unstable moments. I would especially like to mention the names of Shalini Choudhary, Suparna Jain, Bhawna Mallik, Namrata Namami, and Puneet Yadav. They not only helped me in my data collection, but have also been a strong support system during my Ph. D. I used to have long discussions with Shalini Choudhary, which certainly helped me in clearing many of my doubts. Sugandh Gupta, Swapna P., and Anamika Rai were very kind for their help in my data collection as well. I am deeply grateful to all these people for their help.

I would like to thank the staff of the departmental computer laboratory and the departmental library, the Central Research Library, University of Delhi, and the Durganand Sinha Library, Department of Psychology, University of Allahabad for all their kind cooperation. The other non-teaching staff of the department of Psychology, University of Delhi was also very helpful and kind towards me.

I would like to take this opportunity to express my gratitude to some of my teachers, of my Bachelor’s and Master’s, who in some way or the other have been a part of my Ph. D. I had a lot of discussions with Prof. (retd.) E. S. K. Ghosh, Department of Psychology, University of Allahabad, about my research proposal prior to taking admission at the University of Delhi. His suggestions were very useful in giving me proper direction in my research. Prof. Komilla Thapa, Department of Psychology, University of Allahabad, had also given me useful suggestions for my research proposal. It was her appreciation and encouragement that further motivated me to go ahead with this topic of research, which does not fit in the conventional mold of research in psychology in India. Finally, I am thankful to Prof. Purnima Singh, currently working at the Department of Humanities and Social Sciences, Indian Institute of Technology, Delhi. Prof. Singh was the supervisor of my Master’s thesis in the Department of Psychology, University of Allahabad. My Master’s thesis was in the area of interpersonal relationships; it was her able guidance that gave me a head-start in this area and led me to continue my research within this area in my Ph. D.

I would like to give a special mention to my parents and my elder brother over here. My father, Prof. N. R. Farooqi, who is a leading historian and the Dean (Research and Development), at the University of Allahabad, has always been a figure of inspiration and motivation. He has always been there to guide me and give me all the support that is needed. His timely advices have been truly fruitful. My mother Ms. Nilofer Farooqi is perhaps one of the kindest and most selfless persons on earth. Her mere presence is enough in giving me a sense of comfort and composure. Her never ending encouragement and support has always been helpful and she has always motivated me to go ahead with all that I want to do in life. My elder brother, Mr. Tausif Farooqi, a successful software engineer and an amateur photographer, has always been a figure of strength in my life. His constant encouragement and motivation has proved to be a guiding force in more ways than one. The love and care of my parents and brother has made me the person that I am.

In all I am very thankful to all the people who have in some way or the other made a contribution in my Ph. D.
