ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

Having worked with young people on the issues related to reproductive and sexual health and interacting with young people from villages and cities, was one of the most enriching experiences of my life. These interactions with young people and their resolve to improve their lives drove me to look at the issues which were crucial to them. This research study has been possible because of the motivation from young people.

First of all I would like to acknowledge the motivation, support, supervision and guidance of my research supervisor Dr. Gora Chand Khan. Prof. Khan supported me to understand the details of carrying out this study. He was a part of all the steps I took during literature review, data collection and analysis. His encouraging words and belief in me that I will do very good, kept my standards high for myself. He never allowed me to compromise on the standards he expected from his student nor did he discourage me when I was finding the going difficult. Prof. Gora Chand Khan took very keen interest in each finding and outcome/observation from the field. He seems to know my respondents as well as I know them. His criticism was so constructive that it motivated me to improve and enjoy my work.

I would like to acknowledge the guidance and support provided by my Co-Supervisor Prof. A S Kohli, Department of Social Work, Jamia Millia Islamia University, New Delhi. Prof. Kohli’s support and feedback on my work is in valuable for this study. He has motivated me to finish my study in time.

The primary credit for this research goes to the young women and men and the villages of Loonkaransar in Bikaner District Rajasthan, where this study was conducted. The villages and people were so warm and supportive during numerous data collection visits. The harsh heat of Thar Desert in the months of May-June was bearable only because of the love of these people and my respondents.

The support I have got from my department is invaluable. Prof. Prasanta Ghosh, Prof. Debotosh Sinha and all the faculty at Department of Social Work at Visva Bharati has been extremely motivating and encouraging whenever I met them. There valuable feedback during submitting proposal and during pre-submission seminar has helped me improve my work further. I am particularly thankful to prof. Prof. Prasanta Ghosh for being so considerate of my absence during field work/ data collection. He always picked up my call and helped me out in whichever way he could.

I would also like to acknowledge the feedback from Prof.A.N.Singh Kashi Vidya Peeth( External Expert). Prof.Singh’s expert advice helped me to broaden the concept and look deeper into the analysis and synchronization between objectives and findings.

My deepest acknowledgement goes to University Grants Commission (UGC) for giving me financial support for this research through the period of this study in the form of Junior/ Senior Research Fellowship (JRF/ SRF). This financial support and the supportive role that UGC has paid in my study mean a lot for this study.

All the administrative staff of my department and that of the Registrar office, have been extremely helpful and supportive at various points in time (especially Mr. Shanti Ranjan for my SRF upgrade).

I would also like to acknowledge the support I got from various libraries in India like the Library at Visva Bharati University, Library at Tata Institute of Social Sciences, Mumbai, Library at School of Social Work, Delhi University and Libraries at Jamia Millia Islamia. Though I wasn’t a regular student at most of these libraries, the access I got and the support I was extended was deeply useful.

At this point I would also like to thank my “Intellectual discussion friends” ( Dr. Neelam Sukhramani- Prof. at department of Social Work. Jamia Millia Islamia University, Delhi and Dr. Anjana Srivastava- Prof. department of English at Kamla Nehru College, Delhi University These friends were always a phone call away during any time of day and night, with their valuable suggestions and words of encouragement.

This study would not have been possible without the help of URMUL SETU SANSTHAN,Loonkaransar, Bikaner, Rajasthan, India. The staff of URMUL especially
Mr. Rameshwar were extremely helpful and cooperative. They provided all the information on the logistics required for field/data collection.

My parents (Mr. S D Ram and Mrs. Shanti Devi) have supported me through the years of this research and my life in every possible way. This research would not have been possible without the encouragement, belief and dreams of my parents. My sister Dr. Sujata Gupta, was always there with all the wise words of support and pushing me to finish my work successfully. Her critical inputs have always meant a lot to me. My Mother-in-Law Mrs. Sujata Golwalkar, was extremely encouraging and optimistic about my research. She always wanted to do a PhD herself but now she saw her dream being fulfilled through her Daughters-in-Law.

My husband Mr. Sachin Golwalkar, supported me in every possible way. The encouragement he provided and the belief that he was always there for us, made it possible for me to dedicate all my time and energy to this study. During the submission deadline, he took care of the home, our child and everything under the sun, along with his own high pressure job so that I could dedicate my energy to this study.

Lastly I would like to acknowledge my son Siddharth, who was only 4 year old when I started my research and he did not even know the meaning of PhD. But he accompanied me to each and every village in the desert in the heat of summer, and was always there as my source of motivation, inspiration and love. Towards the end of my research he tried to do his school home-work and exam preparation by himself so that his mother could finish her work in time.

I would like to acknowledge all those people, who have knowingly or unknowingly supported this research work.
