I would like to thank a number of others who in one way or another encouraged and helped me in completing my phd.

Dr. Avijit Pathak concretized my vague idea of working on media culture and guided and inspired me all the way through. The faculties of CSSS/SSS of JNU provided me with the initial inputs necessary to go ahead with the research work.

Mary John spared time to discuss the theoretical details and did comment by choosing such a broad area as field I probably am spreading myself a bit too thin- which I realized only but later. Sonia Bhadla tried to help me out of my confused state by suggesting to read more and read systematically. Vinod Pawanalla gave me some insight into the methodology of communication research. Usha Rai flattered me by putting through to people with that touching line, ‘after all she is writing on us’. Anita Saluja changed some of my perceptions on women journalists. Mallika Chopra and Kalyani Sarkar provided me with elaborate details on the role of women journalists in the post feminist era. Manisha Natrajan and Asutosh Rout reframed my outlook on electronic media. Geetam Mishra and R. Jayshree overwhelmed me with their dedication for their job. Poornam Rai actually made me watch DD News for two consistent months instead of writing presumed conclusions about the channel.

My parents patiently tolerated and financed me all through my lingering academic years in JNU and my mother did pray for me to help me get out of this stagnation. Mamuni wonderfully kept my spirit alive during all the transitional phases I went through. Kulubhai helped me out with computer formatting. And well meaning friends lived up to expectation. Amita exasperatedly promised not to poke her nose in my business any more as she was convinced I would not listen. Elisa did not miss any opportunity to lend her helping hand and put me through to people in journalism which was of tremendous use.
Sandhya over impressingly advised me to do something constructive as well along with the ph.d. work and Jayshree patiently listened to all my experiences and hurdles and frustrations in the field or with the literature during the course of my work. Gangesh highlighted on how government controlled media functions and gave intellectual inputs that helped me improve the basic framework of my thesis. Swati conspired to manipulate the fieldwork and get rid of this exertion. Urushii sincerely introduced me to few of her journalist friends who otherwise seemed inaccessible. Ani’s inspiring lines worked wonders during null phases. Kiran, Sridhara, Vikal, Mallesh, Jiju, Vijaya were responsibly sounding encouraging all through the research work and would drop in or call up at frequent intervals to inquire about the progress of the work.

Hindustan Times co-operated without much ado. . After the initial hiccups of convincing the authority of Times of India building, the corridors of Navbharat Times was really welcoming and encouraging. NDTV snubbed me off as ‘irrelevant intruder’. Doordarshan was formal but approachable. Amit sen Gupta(HT), S.P. Das-DD), Ran Kripal Singh(NT)and Sonia Verma(NDTV) introduced me to the women journalists of their respective organizations and flagged off the field work. All my respondents have been articulate enough in providing me the insiders’ perspective necessary for the research. Deepak, the librarian of the HT, sat with me those hot afternoons in the ill equipped, dusty record room with impatient vigour and found my endevour preposterous, yet did not mind bearing with me.

Dina, Bahadur and Shantoshi were of great domestic help and Vicky and Rahul—the drivers—were integral during field work.

Satya’s intrusion into my life during a crucial phase of my ph.d. work reshuffled my priorities in life, and subsequent arrival of Sreya made my world miraculous.

And God up there planned (and still plans) everything for me, with or without my consent.
