Acknowledgements

During the course of this thesis, I have benefited from the kindness of many people. It is difficult to express my gratitude to Dr. Dilbagh Singh. As a supervisor he has offered invaluable help, fresh intellectual perspective and encouraged me to apply greater rigor in my arguments. His understanding of archival sources has been of immense help. I have also greatly benefited from the stimulating discussions with B. D. Chattopadhyaya, K. K. Trivedi, Rajat Dutta, Muzaffar Alam, B.P. Sahu, Mahesh Rangarajan, Nandini Sinha and Yogesh Sharma.

I take this opportunity to thank Pankajda for his patient efforts in grooming my analytical skills, developing a historical perspective and pointing out my weaknesses from time to time.

This dissertation could never have taken the present form without the help of Amitda and Shashank in shaping the manuscript and their encouragement throughout.

Any research of this nature would not have been possible without the assistance of the staff of the Rajasthan State Archives, Bikaner; Nehru Memorial Museum & Library, New Delhi, and Indian Council of Historical Research, New Delhi, who have been extremely cooperative. The extensive fieldwork for this study was funded by the ‘Minor Research Project’ grant sanctioned by the University Grants Commission for which I am grateful.

I also wish to thank Dinesh and Sudheer of Vision Computers for neat and correct typing.

To all my friends and colleagues, I am grateful for their support and constant encouragement. As in all other endeavours, the blessings of my father and elders have been a source of strength.
Last but not the least, I would like to express my appreciation to Raj for her patience and thank her for constant encouragement, especially during times of stress.

Of course, responsibility for all shortcomings is mine.

New Delhi
09 November 2001

Mayank Kumar