Acknowledgements

Writing a thesis is a complex task. This task, however, is rewarding and brings the writer in contact with new people, new perspectives and conspicuous ways of looking at life. Many people have supported me by encouraging and giving critical comments to the text. They listened to me and responded when I struggled to invent my own perspectives.

My supervisor, Dr. Maitrayee Chaudhuri, has encouraged me and given invaluable guidance throughout my JNU academic life. It is a pleasure to work with her and this work could not have been formulated in a profound structure, nor could it reach this stage had I not received her innovative ideas and constructive criticisms. I express my sincere thanks to my supervisor.

I am also grateful to my teachers with whom I did my course work in 1998-99 in JNU. They could enhance my knowledge in various horizons of sociology and anthropology that ultimately aided me in my PhD. study.

Of course it was a great opportunity for me to have a new orientation in anthropology by the constant interaction with Dr. Jayantha Perera, a consultant anthropologist who carefully read my manuscript, continuously encouraged me to narrow down the scope, and assisted in all possible ways. I am greatly obliged to Dr. Perera.

I owe my sincere thanks to my colleague Anura Manatunga and his relatives who opened the channel to approach the expected communities in the village Teripahe. I take this opportunity to express my gratitude to all the people in the village Teripahe during five months of my intensive fieldwork. Especially, my most sincere thanks are due to Rev. Tibbotugoda Dharmarama, Sri Nissanka – the former Village Headman, Chandra Wickramasingha, Sampath Dissanayaka, H. B. Dissanayaka, K. M. Piyasingha, Kulatissa, Sheela and Indumathi for their kind and dedicated assistance.

The fieldwork would not have been successful without my two dedicated field assistants, Dilan Gunawardane and Bandula Hapuarachchi. I am indebted to them for their honest work.

I gratefully appreciate the sincere assistance of Dr. R. Sugathan for his comments on various sections of the manuscript. I also appreciate the assistance provided by my colleagues, Dr. Ranaweera Banda, A. S. Chandrabose, Antony Rajan, Dr. Rev. H. Deerananda, Rajeewa Jayasinghe and U. R. Hewawithanagamage.

I am grateful for the financial assistance I received for the degree course from the Indian Centre for the Cultural Relations under the Commonwealth Scholarship Programme in India. I owe my sincere thanks to the Indian Centre for the Cultural Relations as well as to the High Commission of India in Sri Lanka.

The Department of Sociology at the University of Kelaniya in Sri Lanka is a newborn department and was lacking my service for the last three years that had added to the hardships of my colleagues, and I express my thanks to them.

Finally, my sincere thanks go to my wife, Sepalika and two children Malinga and Pumima. They have contributed their labour towards the completion of the thesis by neglecting many important things of their life.
