ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

Sometimes, words fail to express, particularly one’s sense of gratitude. Nonetheless, my greatest single obligation is to my research Supervisor Professor Kiran Saxena for her serious academic and personal co-operation; the result being the completion of this thesis. In fact, Prof. Saxena not only encouraged me to explore the possibility of such multidisciplinary subject for research but also provided me all necessary help right from the discussions and guidance to making available some of the important references. Further, she supervised entire work with great involvement and interests that facilitated improvement in the quality of the work. I am grateful to her for she took every care to ensure that the work progresses in proper direction and her loving and caring nature always boosted me morally.

I am thankful to all the faculty members of the Centre for Political Studies, who were always generous in shaping my queries and knowledge and extended invaluable suggestions. They were always very supportive throughout the course of this work. They also provided me all necessary help that led to timely completion of the work. I am very thankful to one and all for their cooperation. My gratitude also goes to the staff and members of the CPS Library; JNU Library; Teen Murti Library and Sahitya Academy, New Delhi.

Special thanks are also due to all those people, from different centres of JNU, who provided me every help during the course of this work notably Prof. Nandu Ram and Dr. Vivek Kumar from the Centre for the Study of Social Systems; Prof. Tulsi Ram from the School of International Studies; Prof. Ghanshyam Shah from the Centre of Social Medicine and Community Health; Prof. S. Thorat from the Centre of Study of Regional Development and Prof. Manager Pandey, Prof. Purshottam Agarwal, Prof. Veer Bharat Talwar and Dr. Devendra Choubey from the Centre of Indian Languages. I got overwhelming support from all of them and their views shaped this work to a large extent making it multidisciplinary. My thanks are also due to Prof. Kanti Bajpai, who as a Warden of my hostel, encouraged me for this work and kept enquiring regularly about the progress of the work.

Further, my sincere thanks are due to Prof. Harmeet Singh Uppal who not only sent me relevant material regarding the contemporary Dalit discourse but also helped me to know more about Punjab and Madhya Pradesh and their politics. He also helped me to analyse Dharati Dhan Na Apana by Jagdish Chandra that is contextualised in Punjab. I am extremely thankful to him for his support and cooperation.
I wish to thank Werner Welschoff, Niranjan Sharma, Ruchi and Diva for their curious discussions from time to time regarding the progress of this work that led me to shape some of my ideas and incorporate them in this study.

My friends, as usual, have been very generous to provide all required support. The list is endless but I would like to thank Rajesh K. Paswan, Vaibhav, Shivani, Sunil and Abhay Kumar from the Centre of Indian Languages for they not only provided me necessary material but also discussed and deliberated many issues that have been dealt in the course of this work. Shashi Kant, Lakhan, Rajesh Suman and Birendra Dubey deserve special thanks for intensive debates (some stretched even late nights) on the subject that helped me to focus the area of my work. Thanks are also due to Sunil, Aashish, Jitendra, Rajeev and Sudhanshu who helped during my stay in Lucknow in connection to this work.

There is another acknowledgement, which I desire to make with more confidence, love and greetings. It is an acknowledgement of debt that I owe to Disha Uppal who remains to be a witness of my struggling life and endeavoured to be a friend and companion. She not only encouraged me to think by her presence but also consistently motivated me, by her questions, to revise and correct my thoughts. My thanks are due to her for all possible help and cooperation she extended during the course of this study.

The financial assistance rendered by the University Grant Commission during the initial period of this work is greatly acknowledged.

I am thankful to Sonu Photostat (Jaleesh) for formatting & Printing.

I owe an immense debt of gratitude to my parents and family members who have always inspired me to be optimistic even during the darkest hour of life.

I humbly dedicate this work to the fond memory of my Amma without whom I feel so disenchanted for life. In fact, I feel that it is due to her blessings that I am able to complete this work. I wish she could have seen this work, but alas!
