Acknowledgements

My last remaining task is to acknowledge all those people that have contributed to this thesis. This is an impossible task, given the many people that have helped me design, implement, apply, criticise and evangelise the work. I am going to try anyway, and if your name is not listed, rest assured that my gratitude is not less than for those mentioned below.

First, I thank my supervisor Professor Varun Sahni for his continuous support. He was always there to give advice and helped me to complete the writing of this thesis as well as the challenging research that lies behind it. Without his encouragement and constant guidance, I can safely say that this thesis would not have seen the light of day. He has helped me in getting materials I desperately need to get the task done. He has allowed me to freely rummage through his many books, articles and other materials. He has also undergone the ordeal of proof-reading my manuscripts chapter by chapter patiently. I learned a lot from him. However, any errors or inaccuracies in my thesis reflect a purely individual failing to meet his high standards. What he has done for me cannot be described in just a paragraph, no exaggeration. “Thanks” is too small a word.

I also thank many of my friends in JNU who have helped me in providing critical suggestions in my chapters.

I thank all the faculty and staff of the Centre for International Politics, Organisation and Disarmament (CIPOD), School of International Studies who have been very supportive and helpful through all my years in the campus.

I thank the Jawaharlal Nehru University Library whose books, journals and other materials form an important component of this thesis.
I thank my parents and my brothers. Your love and encouragements are more valuable to me than any thing else in the world. You were there through my darkest hours. You were there when I needed you. I know I will never be able to repay you for everything you have done for me. I will be there for you if and whenever you need me.

Lastly, I thank God for all the blessings that He has bestowed upon me.

Having been privileged in receiving such support that this thesis badly needed, I own all responsibility for all the errors or omissions in this work.
