ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

I am grateful to Dr. H.C. Narang, my supervisor, for introducing me to the magic of modern African literature. His involved way of teaching the subject attracted me towards this field. As my supervisor, he not only gave me useful suggestions, along with my parents he also provided the much needed moral support to go on with my work amidst a lot of personal problems and adverse conditions. Without his personal attention towards me and his unfailing sympathy and patience, this thesis would not have taken shape.

I am indebted to my parents for making me what I am today and inducing in me a sense of self-respect and integrity. In spite of their financial constraint they have always encouraged me in their best possible way to move forward in life. I do not find words to express my gratitude and thanks to them for whatever they have done for me.

I am also grateful to Prof. H.S. Gill for helping me - like a true semiotician - to discover my creative self. And I thank Dr. Vaishna Narang for her kind concern and encouragement.
I would like to make a special mention of Mrs. Lalita Sharma for, among other things, assuming the role of my second mother, providing me with a home away from home, her critical observations on my topic, and for giving me all moral and financial support without which I could not have completed this project. I also thank her husband, Mr. Y.P. Sharma for his encouragement and love.

So many people lent me their support and deserve my thanks; among them I fondly remember Sourav, Mukesh, Arshad Jeelani, Prabir, Soumya and Ayesha. I owe them more than I can return.

My heart-felt thanks to Ritaji, Rawat Sahab and Karamchand from the Centre Office who always encouraged me and kept me in good humour.

My grateful thanks to Om Prakashji for his painstaking work of typing this thesis.

Finally, I thank my comrade and wife, Sindhu. Not a single moment of my working on and writing of this thesis exists without her.
