ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

The studies embodied in the thesis were partially carried out as a part of the project of the Ministry of Environment & Forests, Government of India on "Criteria for Recommended Standards for Human Exposure to Environmental Heat", at the National Institute of Occupational Health, (ICMR), Ahmedabad, India. The author gratefully acknowledges the kind permission of the Ex-Director of the Institute, Dr. S.K. Kashyap and Dr. H.N. Saiyed, the Director of the Institute in undertaking these studies.

The author is deeply indebted to Dr. P.K. Nag, Deputy Director, Occupational Physiology Division of the National Institute of Occupational Health, Ahmedabad for his valuable, expert and unique guidance. The constant encouragement, and appreciation from Dr. Nag, throughout the process of preparing this work was a great motivating factor to the author, without which it would have been an unsuccessful attempt.

With deep admiration and indebtedness, the author expresses profound gratitude to the Management of the present employer, M/s Aventis CropScience. A special thanks to Mr. Barry W. Penney, Technical Director, M/s Aventis CropScience and Mr. R.B. Shah, Site Manager, M/s Aventis CropScience for giving permission to complete the long pending work.
The author respectfully acknowledges the valuable suggestions, moral support and help received from Dr. Anjali Nag, SRO of the Institute along with other Departmental colleagues Mr. S. P. Ashtekar, Mrs Heena Desai, Mr. M.S. Vaghela, Ms. Bina G. Shah and Mr. B.B. Patel.

The sincere support received from my colleagues of EHS Department, M/s Aventis CropScience, especially from Mr. D.M. Naik, Mr. A.K. Nandi, Mr. B. I. Trivedi is heartily acknowledged. Thanks to all my friends, especially to Ms. Alaknanda Patel, Mrs. Ruchita Shah, Mr. Yaswant Singh Panwar, Mr. & Mrs. Hemant Jain, Mr. & Mrs. Prasad Oak, Mr. & Mrs. Amol Kamath for their constant encouragement and care.

The author also expresses his gratitude to all of his subjects for their cooperation and cordial assistance.

Above all I would like to express my love and gratitude to my parents, my wife, my sister and all my family members who inspired me every moment to accomplish the most desired objective.
