Acknowledgements

Foremost, I would like to express my sincere gratitude to my advisor Prof. Imrana Qadeer for the continuous support in my Ph.D study and research, for her patience, motivation, enthusiasm, and immense knowledge. Her guidance helped me in research and writing of this thesis. I am thankful for her insightful comments, and hard questions. I could not have imagined having a better advisor and mentor for my Ph.D study. Her truly analytical intuition has made her a constant oasis of ideas and passions in social arena which exceptionally inspired and enriched my growth as a student and as a researcher.

She showed me different ways to approach a research problem and the need to be persistent to accomplish any goal. She was always there to meet and discuss my ideas, to raise questions to help me think through my problems (whether subjective or analytical). She has provided me with her excellent vision to conduct investigations and concentrate on the key issues. During these years of knowing her, she has helped me to see life in its full depth, and to live intensively. I am indebted to her more than she knows.

Distinctive gratitude is also paid to Prof. Rajib Dasgupta, my co-Supervisor who participated in the review process of this thesis report, as well as for his wise pieces of advice during the study period, especially in the last phase.

The path towards this thesis spans several years of work with amendments in the juvenile justice legislation and efforts towards its better implementation, many people have been involved and contributed to the presented ideas and understanding gained. The author acknowledges her debt to those who have helped along the way and influenced the formation of the understanding of the perception of the intended beneficiaries of the Indian Juvenile Justice System and the legal mechanism and the Home staff presented in this thesis.

My sincere thanks goes to late Dr. Hira Singh for his intense work on juvenile justice and his series of unpublished papers, which gave me tools that turned out to be essential in my PhD research, and for answering quickly all the questions I had about topics of his expertise. It was particularly kind of him to allow me to refer to his collection of various unpublished Government reports on the implementation of the Juvenile Justice System. His advice and contribution has been crucial especially during the initial stages of this thesis.

I also thank the Directorate of Social Welfare for allowing me to pursue my research in the government run Children’s Homes in the Delhi region. Special thanks to the staff of Children's Homes and especially the Superintendent and Child Welfare Officers of CHG – I & II for allowing me to interact with the children in Homes. I am also indebted to the staff members in the Juvenile Justice Boards and Child Welfare Committees who despite the time constraint always bothering them, spared time to share their views on the current functioning of the legal mechanism under the much amended Juvenile Justice Act.

above all I am grateful to all the children of the four Government Homes and on the streets of Delhi (Hanuman Mandir and New Delhi Railway Station) for the trust they bestowed on me in sharing about their lives and experiences. Their will to survive and help each other was an eye opener as was their wisdom with which they approach life.

Many thanks go in particular to those children who on my insistence recalled some of the most harrowing experiences with the Juvenile Justice system, inside its institutions and outside on the roads.

Finally I want to thank my family. First and foremost my husband for the encouragement and support, for his enduring patience, understanding, and love; he accomplished without complaints the endless errands that I asked him to do. I owe him for unselfishly letting his intelligence, passions, and ambitions collide with mine. Special thanks to him also for helping me with the tables and formatting of this thesis. Our always positive and joyful son Raghav, has been a powerful source of inspiration, relaxation and energy. A special thought is devoted to my parents for their never-ending unconditional support and encouragement to pursue my interests. Finally, I would like to thank everybody who was important to the successful realization of thesis, as well as expressing my apology that I could not mention personally one by one.

For any errors or inadequacies that may remain in this work, of course, the responsibility is entirely mine.
