Acknowledgements

First and foremost, I am indebted to the late Berta Menezes Braganza. The obvious intensity of her involvement in Goa's freedom struggle inspired me to probe into its complexities.

I am thankful to my guide, Dr William R da Silva, for helping me to select this fascinating subject of study, providing me with relevant material and for supervising my work.

This work has profited from the interactions I have had with several persons: Alito Siqueira and Peter D'Souza provided valuable comments on earlier drafts of this work. Manjit Singh and Rowena Robinson helped me to clarify my ideas in the crucial initial stages. Discussions with Carmo Azevedo, Shashecj Hegde, Bernadette Gomes and Pratima Kamat have helped me at various stages of this work. Subhash Naik Jorge, Carmo Azevedo, Peter D'Souza, Alito Siqueira and Shailendra Mehta gave me access to useful material.

Prashant Naik, Roque Fernandes, Pravin Sabnis and Lester Fernandes helped me to conduct interviews which were vital for this thesis.

Vivek Mordekar, Vidya Heble, Melanie Siqueira, Gurunandan Bhatt and Naomi Rodrigues have spent long hours, helping with the technical aspects of this thesis.

I am grateful to all those who made Kabir's hours away from us enjoyable, which enabled me to work without tension. A special mention is due to the Carmelite Sisters of the Xavier Institute (Sushila Building), Subhanti, my parents-in-law, Shyamal and the Bal Bhavan.

Prashanti Talpankar provided me with moral support and gave me practical help, which saw me through the period that I worked on the thesis.

I am thankful for the encouragement I received from my mother-in-law, my mother, Shraddha and Ushafui. Kabir with his constant query, 'Isn't your work over yet?' helped me to see my work in perspective. He exhibited a great deal of understanding for one so young. Ashwin has been my severest but most supportive critic. He has played a vital role in giving shape to this thesis and paid meticulous attention to its presentation.

I am also thankful to several other people -- too many to name -- who, in ways big and small, have made this work possible.

This thesis is dedicated to the memory of Pappa, whose belief in me continues to be a source of strength.
