ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

A task that ends well always makes one feel that all the time and efforts that went into accomplishing it was worthwhile. If I look back now on the travails and sacrifices that I had made to conduct this research, they seem insignificant even trivial, because at the end of it I have made my contribution, however small, to make the world a better place. I had been blessed, supported, loved, and cared for by many people during this endeavour and it would have been impossible to write this thesis without all of them rallying around me, only some of whom it is possible to give particular mention here.

Foremost among all is my supervisor, Dr. Neera Agnimitra, who had guided me through the entire process with a smile on her face and never ever losing her patience with me. She allowed me the freedom to develop my critical abilities and always instilled confidence in me. Her knowledge and passion for ecology had always inspired me and I thank her for that. In all these years, Neera Ma’m had become more than a supervisor to me and her advice had been invaluable to me both at an academic as well as at a personal level. I will forever cherish the time spent under her tutelage and will always remain obliged to her for all that she has taught me.

This thesis will remain incomplete without acknowledging the help and encouragement provided by Dr. Manoj K. Jha. I have yet to meet a person like Jha sir in my life, whose intellectual pitch is matched only by his genuinely good nature and big-heartedness. I sincerely appreciate his contributions in terms of friendly guidance, thought-provoking suggestions and encouragement to always strive towards excellence. I also extend a special note of thanks to Dr. Md. Shahid for his genuine concerns, thoughtful gestures and intellectually stimulating discussions.

I also take this opportunity to thank the current Head of the Department of Social Work, University of Delhi, Prof. Sushma Batra for her facilitation and kind cooperation. I would also like to thank the former HOD, Prof. Sanjai Bhatt, for always being there and making things a lot easier by his joviality and easy collegiality.

I would also like to express my gratitude towards Prof. N.P.S. Chauhan and the Wildlife Institute of India library for allowing me access to the treasure trove of literature on various aspects of wildlife management and ecology. Thanks are also due to the Delhi University Library System for making available the huge repository of e-resources at just the click of a button and saving me the trouble of running around libraries and sifting through volumes of published material.

I will forever remain indebted to Aaranyak and all its members for initiating me into the field of biodiversity conservation. I particularly thank Bibhab sir, Bibhuti da, Niranjan, Jyoti, and Firoz da for helping me out during the course of my fieldwork in Assam.

The assistance that Mr. Anupam Sharma, Mr. Hiten Baishya, Mr. David and the entire WWF-India NBL team provided during the course of my data collection in Sonitpur cannot be acknowledged in words. The team went out of their way to ensure that I could smoothly conduct my data collection without having to worry about anything else and I thank them wholeheartedly for all their help.

Thanks are also due to the DFO, Eastern Assam Wildlife Division; Director, Kaziranga National Park (KNP); Range Officer, Kohonra Range Office, KNP; Research Officer, KNP;
DFO, Eastern Assam Territorial Division; DFO, Western Assam Wildlife Division; DFO, Western Assam Territorial Division; staff of Amguri forest camp; Forest Beat Officer, Numaligarh Beat and all other staff members of various Forest Offices that I had visited during the course of my research. I would like to specially thank the help of Mr Gopal Deka, Forest Beat Officer of Jia Gabharu Beat and his wife Meera for her warm hospitality.

I had been fortunate to have had the assistance of Pradeep, Diganta, Montu and Swaraj during the process of my data collection in Golaghat. They had accompanied me on my data collection trips braving scorching heat and heavy downpours, at times even walking for several kilometres a day drenched in sweat or rain but bearing it all patiently without any complaints. I thank each one of them from the bottom of my heart for their company and facilitation.

I also owe my thanks to many of my relatives who had spared no efforts in ensuring that the study is a success. Among all, I would specially like to express my gratitude towards Bhaiî dai and his family, Joon da and his family, Hiroo, Montu da and his family, Swapan da, Durno dada, Dipu dai, Sarbananda, Himani mahî and moha. I am also grateful to Mr Jiten Saikia, Mr Uttam Saikia, Mr Dulumoni Saikia, and Mr Jeet Bahadur Chetri for all their help and cooperation.

I would also like to thank my friends and colleagues at the Department of Social Work, particularly Supriya and Ghazala for always wishing the best for me. I also earnestly thank my colleagues at TESS-India for being accommodative and considerate.

This acknowledgement would be incomplete without thanking all the participants in my study who had obliged me by giving in their valuable time and inputs. I hope I had been able to adequately capture their voices and reproduce it out loud enough for the world to take notice of the plight of humans and animals battling it out for survival in this corner of the globe.

I would like to conclude by offering my heartfelt thanks to my family who had always stood by me and never left me in doubt of their love for me. Words fall short to express my gratitude towards my beloved parents, Deta and Ma, who made every efforts to protect us from harm but at the same time made us independent; made us successful but taught us humility and encouraged us to be competitive but fair. I thank them for being the best parents on this earth. I would also like to thank my siblings, Popba and Boon, for their companionship and always being there to comfort, and encourage me. Thanks to Miku, my little nephew, for coming into our lives and teaching us all to live, love and laugh some more. I also truly appreciate the support and help of my mother-in-law who had been with me in the most crucial of moments. Finally, the person who had been my best friend and soul-mate for the past twelve years of my life, my husband Mrinal. There were times during my PhD when I was cranky, irritable and ill-tempered but he bore it all with calm reasoning and encouraged me to persevere and seek out the light at the end of the tunnel. I thank him for traversing the entire length of the dark tunnel holding my hand and helping me emerge out of it smiling, proud and victorious. I cannot imagine doing this work without him by my side.

There have been many others who had helped me, in some way or the other, during the course of this work, all of whose names it is impossible to take here. I, however, thank each one of them from the bottom of my heart for contributing towards successful completion of my research.
