8. CONCLUSION

Counseling had a positive effect on infertile women in reducing some aspects of self-perceived depression, anxiety and stress and also in increasing the pregnancy rate. Therefore, intervention programs to reduce depression, anxiety and stress should be given to all infertile women as a regular practice alongside their treatment for infertility.