ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

First and foremost I express my sincerest gratitude to Prof. Imrana Zadeer for her encouragement, advice, and support at all stages of this research. She has been much more than a supervisor. I also thank the rest of the faculty members, the documentation officer, and the office staff of the Centre of Social Medicine and Community Health, J.N.U., for their all along co-operation.

This doctoral work would have been much more difficult without the Research Fellowship of the UGC which withstood the financial requirements to a large extent. The office staff of the School of Social Sciences and the Scholarships and Projects Section of this university need to be commended for their collaborations with all students in general and me in particular.

For the fieldwork, I am obliged to the Directorate of Health Services, Govt. of West Bengal, its Director and Addl. Director (Admin.) for the permission and their co-operation. The Director, State Bureau of Health Intelligence, Calcutta, the Director and faculty of the All India Institute of Hygiene and Public Health, Calcutta, and Dr. T.K. Dey of the Rural Health Research and Training Unit, Singur have been major helps in giving access to information.
In Purulia, the CMOH, Dr. K. B. Sinha, Dr. B. B. Patra, the Dy. CMOH - III; and Mr Kalyan Sinha of the NM Unit went out of their ways to facilitate the field work. The other numerous medical officers, supervisory officers, and staff of the Health Department of Purulia have had all been very co-operative and keen in extending their able support. This study is indebted to them all.

On a more personal front, I appreciate the perseverance of my parents in bearing with the years of my Ph.D work. My gratefulness to my brothers Partha and Pinku for their hope and enthusiasm in this thesis which kept me going at hard times. I also mention my fellow researchers who have been real friends in need: Robert, Pramod, Sam, Gajendra, Abhay, Senu, Patty, Preet and last but never the least Gunjan - my heartfelt thanks and best wishes to all of them.
