Acknowledgement

This thesis embodies the life-world of the Koms (Komrem) in Manipur. It provides a critical space for Komrem people who often find little expression in the mainstream academic discussion, history and political discourse of the region.

I am profoundly indebted to Prof. Denzil Saldanha, my guide, who was instrumental in motivating me to arrive at this stage of the work. His pedagogical discipline, professionalism, wide reading, experience and understanding of the social reality as a teacher and guide enriched me immensely. My gratitude also goes to Prof. J.J. Roy Burman and Dr. Bipin Jojo for having assisted me in the capacity of the Doctoral Advisory Committee members.

I am immensely thankful to the Institute for the space provided to me for my academic growth. A sincere note of gratitude to Prof. Parasuraman, the Director and Prof. Surinder Jaswal, Dean of the School of Social Work for their support and encouragement.

My gratitude goes to the Centre for Social Justice and Governance. It has provided me with an academic environment which shaped my perspective of understanding the lived experiences of tribes and indigenous peoples. In particular, I would like to thank Mr. bodhi SR, my colleague, who was ever ready to help me during the work. My approach as a researcher towards understanding the experiential reality has been greatly influenced by his reading especially on the ontological and epistemological basis of scientific inquiry.

Besides, I would like to make a special note of acknowledgement for all the persons who have inspired me to make commitment to the work. I thank the students and colleagues of the School of Social Work who gave me support and encouragement. In particular, I would like to record my sincere gratitude to Prof. Lina Kashyap, the Deputy Director, colleagues and students of the erstwhile department of Family and Child Welfare (FCW).
Above all, let me take this opportunity to acknowledge the co-operation given to me by the community under study. I have a number of persons who have assisted me in the work.
