REFERENCES

Bhargava, O.P. (1951). Anogeissus pendula in Madhya Bharti proc. VIII

Chen-Xiang Wei; Chen LiXin ; Liu WeiQi; Chen x. W.; Chen LX and Liu W Q. (1999). Nitrogen mineralization in different forest soils.

Ecosystem, India. Ph.D. dissertation, Yale University.

Everyman’s Encyclopaedia, vol. XII, p. 44.

Seventh session 4-6 Dec. 1989, Rome Itly.

Kinsloch, A. (1892). Large game shooting in Thibet, the Himalayas, Northern and Central India, Calcutta.

Kushwah, R. B. S. and V. Kumar (2002). Status of flora in protected areas. The case studies of eight PA's of Madhya Pradesh. Ind. For. 271-288

Mamoria, C. B. Tribal Demography in India, pp. 21-22.

New York.
(Presbytis entellaus Dufrense, 1797) in Kanha Tiger Reserve. Central ecological context : Vegetation, 34 : 191 - 197.

of grasslands in great Indian Bustard area. Indian forester.

deposition on tree growth and soil nutrients in boreal scots pine stands. Environmental Pollution 102 Supp. 1, 61-68.

Odum, E. P. (1962). Relationship between structure and function in the Ohle, W. (1952). Die hypolimnisch kohlendioxy de akkumulation als moisture influence on in organic nitrogen discharge from forest

Oosting, H. J. (1958). The study of plant community.: An introduction to plant ecology. 2nd ed. W. H. Freeman and Co. Sanfrancisco and London.

and dry forest in the low land of costa rica. J. Ecol., 68 : 167-188.

Roxb. (Bidi plant) with special reference to sucker growth and leaf

Saldanha, C.J. (1982). Report on botanical collection from Silent Valley and adjacent regions. Submitted to Department of Science and Technology, Govt. of India, New Delhi.

Shelford, V.E. (1929). Laboratory and field ecology. J. Williams and Wilkins, Baltimore.

Silv. Conif. 190 – 491, Dehradun.

Seasonal variation in ground water quality of agra city. Indian J Enviren Hlth , vol, 42, No.2 P. 59-69, Stebbing, E. B. (1921).

The New Encyclopaedia Bremaninkia vol. X.

