I begin with the deity “Lord Hanuman” who has been the root cause of my inspiration for writing the thesis. I bow to the lotus feet of merciful Almighty for providing me the strength and blessings for this endeavor.

Writing this thesis has undoubtedly been the most difficult, time consuming, and rewarding experience of my life to date, and would not have been possible without the inspiration and encouragement given by many individuals to whom words of thanks are merely a token of gratitude and true appreciation.

First and foremost, on the completion of this work, my most sincere thanks must go to my thesis supervisor, Prof. V Prem Pyara, Dean, Faculty of Engineering, for his guidance, wisdom, and most of all his infinite patience and understanding, without which this thesis may not have been completed at all. Although I am sure there are many better Ph.D. students than myself, I can think of no better supervisor. He has been instrumental in suggesting the topic for my Ph.D. research work, providing continuous guidance and for helping me to overcome the hurdles over the path.

Many thanks must also go to Prof. V. G. Das, Former Director, DEI, Agra, and Prof. D. S. Mishra, Former Dean, Faculty of Engineering, DEI, for their invaluable guidance and support throughout my studies in Faculty of Engineering and during the course of Ph.D. as well. I thank Prof. Prem K. Kalra, Director, Dayalbagh Educational Institute, Agra for his patronage to carry out my research work at DEI.
