ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

I take this opportunity to express my sincere gratitude to my supervisor, Prof. Anjan Mukherji for his sustained guidance, invaluable help and constant encouragement in completing the present research work. Though the work took a much longer time than it should otherwise have taken, he was patience-personified throughout my research period and always had time for me inspite of his busy schedules and commitments elsewhere. I shall always remain indebted to him for his kind consideration towards me and my work.

A Ph.D. work, especially this one, was a long drawn-out affair. One experiences all shades of human feelings and emotions during its course. There are moments of ecstasy when one succeeds in untying the knot of a problem which have been troubling him since quite a long time; but those moments at times turns out to be a very short one as one suddenly realises that it is just an illusion and the problem has not actually been overcome. In fact, while trying to untie a particular knot, one may land up with more sticky knots. Those are the times when one’s spirit gets very low and in fact starts doubting one’s own ability to handle the problem at hand. At times, the frightening thought that the work may not see the light of the day, creeps into one’s mind. I was really fortunate to have a person like Prof. Anjan Mukherji as my supervisor, who even in those mean times, never lost his confidence in my ability and succeeded, not only in keeping me on the track, but also in pushing me forward in my work. Here I shall also mention that the words of encouragement I received from my teachers at the Centre for Economic Studies and Planning, JNU proved to be a great source of my sustenance during all these long years.

I believe that it is friends who can make the world around you worthwhile to live even during hard times. I am proud to admit that I had a great many friends during my stay in the university. I shall forever remain thankful to them for making my stay there, a happy and a memorable one. I hereby gratefully acknowledges their contribution towards the completion of my work.

To check up whether the symbols and equations (which has been generously used in my work) had been rightly written down or correctly placed, is not really a pleasant task and it requires a lot of patience. Hence, it was very essential that I, myself, attend to the above mentioned work towards the final stage. The help and cooperation of my research fellows in the computer room and of course the computer facility available at the Centre, made the above task possible and much more easy and convenient. The final product, not saying much, came out in much improved and tidier form than its earlier version. I take this opportunity to gratefully acknowledge their contributions and wish them luck in their future work.

I deeply acknowledge the University Grants Commission for providing me a Junior/Senior Research Fellowship through the National Entrance Test (NET) which facilitated me in carrying out this study. Thanks are also due to the librarian and the staff of the JNU library and the National Institute of Public Finance and Policy library, all of whom extended great help and cooperation during my work.
I would also like to thank the staff of our Centre, Mr. Rajagopal, Mr. Bist and Mr. Bache Singh for their kind cooperation and help. My special thanks to Mr. Rajagopal who helped me in correction works towards the last phase of my thesis. I should not forget to thank Mr. Rajkumar Deepak Singh who besides providing me logistic support towards the completion of my work, provided certain positive suggestions in regard to lay-outs and also helped me in some corrections.

I also thank Miss Ali of Sharma Photostat, Jia Sarai who very patiently typed out the initial draft of my thesis. The final printout and binding etc. were also done in Sharma Photostat. The final product is there for all to see.

My greatest gratitude is for my family members without whose moral and emotional support I could not have pursued full time research. Towards the end it was my dear wife, Mamta, who kept on reminding me that I should finish my work as soon as possible. She created the environment to work by making it possible for me to keep away from family obligations and other responsibilities. She surely deserves a good credit for the completion of my work.

Finally, I dedicate this work to my dear father, late Shri Ksh. Tolhal Singh and to my little ‘Anmol’. At this hour, I am sad at the thought of not being able to show the final version of my work to my father. My father had passed away just one and half months before my little ‘Anmol’ came to this world. Ironically, both the events seem to be conveying the same message; the first one telling me to finish the work at hand in good time for time does not wait for anyone and the second one asking me to finish the work for the sake of him and his generation.

Ksh. Jhaljit Singh
