ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

It is a pleasure to acknowledge with gratefulness the help I have received from a vast number of individuals and institutions in connection with various facets of the dissertation, a topic on which I have enjoyed working and from which I have derived immense personal satisfaction. While I am beholden to them for sharing their information and views with me, I accept the ultimate responsibility for any errors. The biggest problem with an investigation of this length and complexity is that one's competence and judgement improve in the course of time, gaining adequacy in the task only as the deadline for submission draws near. Of course, given all the time in the world, one would never complete any project, for each revision would not only yield greater experience and the temptation to achieve perfection, clearly unattainable.

I am deeply indebted to my guide, Dr. S. P. Kashyap, Professor, Sardar Patel Institute of Economic and Social Research, Ahmedabad, for the invaluable support and guidance I received at the various stages of the research, for enriching and sharpening the thesis with his immense experience, knowledge and insight, for his constant inspiration and reassurance and for endless hours of discussions both at the Institute and at home.

For Prof. Vijay Padaki and Dr. Vinod Shanbhag, two dear friends who initiated me into the wonderful world of research and were instrumental in inspiring me to work on this topic, constantly encouraging me and boosting my morale, I have no words to express my thanks and gratefulness.

In the course of my interviews, I have been privileged to receive wholehearted co-operation from a number of people connected with the textile industry, both in Ahmedabad and Bombay. These include past and present Presidents of ICMF (Indian Cotton Mills Federation) and ATMA (Ahmedabad Textile Mills Association), mill managements, senior executives and officers of the mills, merchants connected with the distribution of yarn and fabrics, and people connected with the textile industry. The thesis has been enriched by their wide knowledge, experience and candid insights. To all of them, too innumerable to be mentioned individually, my deep and sincere thanks. To the managements of the closed and the sick mills I owe and even greater debt. It was as painful for me as it must have been for them to discuss such a sensitive subject.

I have had the privilege of being informally associated with ATIRA since 1979 when I participated in their Textile Management Programme and later with many research projects at the C.L. Centre for Management. I am deeply grateful to Dr. T. Radhakrishnan, former Director, ATIRA and to Shri A.R. Garde, the present Director, for treating me as a fellow Atirian and allowing me to use ATIRA as a base for research. I am deeply grateful to Shri Garde for going through the draft inspite of his extremely busy schedule and offering valuable insights and comments. While I am thankful to all the colleagues at ATIRA for information, advice and encouragement, I must record my special thanks for help received from Shri S.P. Deshpande, Shri G.H. Trivedi and Shri A.N. Sheikh of the Operational Studies Division, Shri T. Narasimham, Dr. B.V. Iyer and Shri P.J. Chandorkar of the Centre for Macro Studies, Shri R.M. Shankar of the C.L. Centre for Management, Shri P.C. Shah and his colleagues from the Library and NICTAS and to Shri J.J. Patel helping me with the artwork.

I am also thankful to the Ahmedabad Textile Mills Association and Shri M.D. Rajpal, Executive Director for information on the industry. Special thanks are due to Shri G.M. Shukla who promptly furnished the requested data and even computed it specially for the project.

For all my research projects I have been privileged to receive wholehearted cooperation at the Indian Cotton Mills Federation and I take this opportunity to acknowledge it with thanks. I am deeply grateful to Shri C.V. Radhakrishnan, Secretary General, and to Shri Gajaria, Deputy Secretary General, who were always ready to meet me, often at short notice. I have spent many enjoyable hours of discussions at the Federation and benefitted immensely from their wide experience of the textile industry and their insights. Special thanks are also due to Shri Sakhardande who always granted my urgent requests of information with dispatch.

I am grateful to Shri R.J. Mody, Director, The Sardar Patel Institute of Economic and Social Research and his colleagues who provided the requisite administrative support. I also thank Ms. Amita Patel for library facilities.

Thanks are also due to Shri Udayan Chandrakant who helped me with the computer analysis Ms. Harsha Khatri for data entry, and Ms. Bela Desai and Ms. Priya Patel for proof reading the manuscript.

To my family who relieved me of many of my duties to devote myself to the research and for bearing my occasional flashes of impatience with understanding, I am more than grateful. I am specially indebted to my brother, Dr. Lavkumar Kantilal, for sharing his knowledge about the industry and offering valuable suggestions and constructive criticism. How does one thank an exceptionally understanding, wise, and loving old gentleman who constantly inspired and helped his daughter to aspire and attain greater perfection in all her endeavours? I believe the best one can do is to offer him the outcome of his dreams. I dedicate this book to my father, Kantilal Kanaiyalal, with all my love, gratefulness and affection.
