Acknowledgements

I would like to acknowledge the numerous people and institutes whose support has been integral to the completion of this thesis.

First and foremost, I would like to express my sincere thanks to my guide, Professor C. S. Ramachandra for his endless hours of counseling and help. He was definitely a source of inspiration and encouragement throughout the process. If it had not been for his patience, guidance, and invaluable comments, the completion of this thesis would not have been possible.

Special acknowledgements go to the Director of Kuvempu Institute of Kannada Studies, Prof. N.M. Talwar, and the faculty members of the Department of Linguistics Prof. R. Rama Krishna and Dr. B. K. Ravindranath at the University of Mysore who kindly assisted me in one way or another during my studies. I am and will always remain honored to derive benefits from the expertise of the faculty.

I am also deeply indebted to Indian Government for giving me the invaluable opportunity of conducting research in India. The hospitality that the people of India in general and Mysore in particular extended to me is really beyond description. I thank them all.

I should also extend my gratitude to the Library of the University of Mysore and also the library of Central Institute of Indian Languages (CIIL) in Mysore. My access to the journals and books in the field of Second Language Acquisition and Applied Linguistics in these libraries was a privilege that I enjoyed in the process of collecting my secondary data.

In Iran, I am also grateful to the Islamic Azad University, Maybod Branch, where I work as a faculty member for the opportunity that it provided me to pursue my Ph.D. studies and research outside the country. I would also like to appreciate all the staff in Iran Language Institute for giving me a chance to collect the data for my quasi-experimental study in language classes there.

Last but not least, my gratitude goes to the Iranian EFL students in different language institutes in Yazd, Iran who participated in the study and their dedication and cooperation definitely facilitated the process of my data collection.
Dedicated with gratitude to the memory of my parents
