During the course of research, I feel lucky to have guidance, help, comments and criticism from many quarters. I deem it my pleasure to acknowledge with gratitude all of them here. If, I miss any or some of them to mention by name, it would be my absent mindedness but certainly not intentionally.

First of all, I feel great pleasure in expressing my profound sense of gratitude to my respected and learned supervisor Dr. Mushtaq Ahmad Bhat, Reader, Department of Commerce, University of Kashmir, for his able guidance and supervision. In spite of his busy schedule, he took keen interest in the completion of this work. Without his encouragement, inspiration, healthy suggestions and constructive criticism, this project would have hardly been completed. He and all the members of his family always treated me as part of their family. I once again wish to acknowledge my gratitude to all of them for their support and blessings in completing this project.

I acknowledge my heartfelt thanks to Dr. Tariq Rashid Jan, Department of Statistics, University of Kashmir, for his unqualified help for the data analysis. I am grateful to him for his personal interest and help in the form of fruitful discussions and scholarly criticisms as far as the application of statistical tools are concerned.

My sincere gratitude is also due to all the faculty members of the Department of Commerce, University of Kashmir for their support. I also owe my thanks to the librarians, in providing the required literature in time and all the office staff of the Department, for their cooperative attitude.

I acknowledge my indebtedness to all those patients and hospital officials whom I approached during my field survey for their wholehearted and active cooperation, without which it would not have been possible to complete the survey, which forms the basis of the present work. I also owe my thanks to the management of all the hospitals, under study, for their support and cooperation.

I concede that whatever is really appreciable in this study is a result of my constant interaction with some eminent academic personalities and practitioners. I express my unrestrained gratitude to all of them for their scholarly discussions, comments, suggestions and supply of the valuable literature. In particular, I am grateful to Prof. R. D. Sharma (Coordinator, SAP Department of Commerce, University of Jammu, and Dr. Hardeep Chahal, (Reader, Department of Commerce, University of Jammu), from whose research experiences I have enormously gained and guided me to all such sources that matter in the field of services marketing.

I am also thankful to all my friends and relatives for their moral support and encouragement. Thanks are also due to my friends especially Dr. Abid Hamid (PGI, Chandigarh) who made my stay comfortable in Chandigarh during my field study and to Touqeer for assisting me in many respects in the completion of the work.

Special thanks are also due to Almighty, my parents, my sisters and my brother-in-laws especially Qazi Firdous, whose affection, encouragement and support made possible what appeared impossible initially. They were every time ready to help and provided every facility they possibly could.

I cannot part without acknowledging the wholehearted cooperation and steadfast devotion I received from my spouse throughout the completion of this study
