A doctoral dissertation, setting aside its academic pretensions, is an outcome, the emergence of which is deeply set in the researcher’s personal and subjective milieus. This thesis would have been an impossibility unless I had been able to derive proper orientation, guidance, support and morale from various sources and rubrics of confluence, mainly inhabited by my friends, teachers and members of the family. Let me name some of my teachers, friends and interlocutors who exerted the most positive and constructive thrust to the conception and execution of this project. They are:

My supervising teacher, Dr. Thomas Kuruvilla, who courageously extended his whole hearted support and consent to guide research on as unconventional a topic as this. His democratic attitude to my work and opinions is worth mentioning in this context. The care he showed to not impose any pre-planned notions or designs upon me is praiseworthy. The patience and diligence he showed in editing and proofing the innumerable drafts written over a long period of time is remarkable. Above all I thank him for the confidence he placed in me despite my infinite deferral of the final draft.

My indebtedness is great to Dr. Mohammed Nagoor Meeran, Kurien George and Asha Saraswathy, who were the Heads of the Department of English in University College, Thiruvananthapuram, during my tenure there as a full time Research Scholar. They were very helpful in the smooth conduct of the formalities of administration and fellowship. Mention in this regard has to be made of Dr. K. Vijaya Kumar, the incumbent Head of the Department, for his cooperation and support. It would be proper to mention here my appreciation of the staff of the English Department Library, University College, Thiruvananthapuram; the staff of the General Library, University College, Thiruvananthapuram; the staff of the Library, University of Kerala, Thiruvananthapuram, especially the personnel of the Kerala Studies Section, and the staff of the Library, KCHR, Thiruvananthapuram.

Jayasooryan, P.R., Dr. M.N. Parasaruman, Dr. C.S. Biju, Dr. C.B. Mohandas and Anilkumar P.V., who provided intellectually vibrant and inspiring theoretical formulations.

Pappa, Amma and Chechi for all their affectionate care and concern towards me. Again to Pappa for clarifying my doubts regarding some terms and nomenclature of Science and Grammar.

Surya Thejus, Sanoop and Vidhu, for friendship.

G.N. Prasanth, Denis Joseph and Gopa Kumar, for all sorts of friendly advice.

Neethu, for encouraging scraps on Orkut.

Parasu’s in-laws for providing me home and hospitality; Parasu’s sons Kiran and Tejas, and Fenisha for mirthful company whenever I was in Thiruvananthapuram.
Vinod Chandran Mash for sharing some of his views and books on this topic with me.

Lakshmanan (Chengu) Mash, my teacher in Sree Kerala Varma College, for supplying some vital and urgent information needed for documentation.

Dr. C.S. Biju, for making an initial suggestion of this topic, and publishing the English version of some of the themes outlined in thesis in the journal Conspectus.

S. Sanjeev, for publishing the earlier version in Malayalam of some of the rudimentary issues which later proved to be valuable for the present work in Pacha Kuthira and also for imparting the sources of some materials needed for referencing and citation.

Aishamma George, R. Rema Devi and Sabitha Babu, my colleagues in the Dept. of English, Govt. College, Chittur, for all their support and cooperation notwithstanding my prolonged absence from the Dept. for research activities.

My students for having registered their resistance to the speedy coverage of portions due to my regular absence only by means of sleeping postures in the classrooms!

One person who deserves special mention is my friend and confidant Dr. M.N. Parasuraman, whose work as an editor and proof reader is beyond all words.
Gireesh J., my colleague in the Dept. of English, Govt. College, Chittur, for reading the final proof.

I painfully remember the departed soul of Dr. T. K. Nandakumaran, who was my teacher in Sree Kerala Varma College, Thrissur. I do not know whether it is appropriate to acknowledge somebody who lived his life with a verve and intensity closely akin to Zorba and Osho. While alive, he was always anxious about the progress of the work and at times when laziness and lethargy seemed to take hold on me, he used to scold me in a friendly manner, and affectionately goad me towards the final outcome. I thank him for all the indelible marks he has left on me (which I realise and recognise too late), while his presence here was full blown with vibrant energies and amicable discordances.
