Dr. Mahajan P. Mani, as my research supervisor, performed two tasks simultaneously: that of taming the NSS activist in me into an academic researcher, and that of guiding the course of my research into its fruition. I am deeply grateful to him.

Dr. A. K. Chirappanath, Director of the School of Gandhian Thought and Development Studies (SGTDS) extended all co-operation for my work. I am thankful to him for his encouragement.

Mrs. Mary Anne Kuebel, founder and former director of Odenwald Institute of Development Education (Germany) who introduced me to Theme-Centred Interaction, and Dr. G. Waterman of Institute of Social Sciences, (The Hague, Netherlands) who guided me in the use of the facilities at his Institute for a fortnight have been of great help to me in my work. Dr. M. S. John helped me with useful tips in the course of my work. I am thankful to all of them.

NSS has been a significant shaping spirit in my life, as pointed out in the preface. It gave me several fora for trying out the concepts presented in the study. The ideas related to ‘Development Perspective for NSS’, ‘Steps in Village Adoption’, ‘Kottayam Literacy Campaign’, ‘Nalpathimala Experiment’ and ‘NSS in Curriculum’ have had the benefit of being presented and discussed in several national-level groups. I am thankful to the Dept. of Youth Affairs and Sports, Govt. of India for giving me this privilege.
The ideas on inclusion of Community Placement in the curriculum, which appears in Chapter Ten have been presented at a state-level consultation organized by All Kerala Private College Teachers Association (AKPCTA) at Kochi in June 2000. Similarly the paper on Theme-Centred Interaction as a training method of special relevance to India has been presented at the annual conference (2000) of Will International at Gwatt, Switzerland, in May 2000. The discussion that took place on these papers gave me new insights. I am thankful to the organizers of these programmes.

I am thankful to my colleagues in NSS, Adult Education Department and School of Gandhian Thought and Development Studies for their support. I am thankful to Dr. Mary Kurian for her creative suggestions.

My volunteer-colleagues at Nalpathimala helped me to conduct a one-day-long PRA exercise, which yielded valuable empirical data for this study. My thanks are due to them also.

I thank the librarians of Mahatma Gandhi University, Rajagiri College of Social Sciences, School of Gandhian Thought and Development Studies, and British Council Library (Trivandrum) for their support.

Finally I thank Regi T. G. and Lishamol T. S. (Premier Computer Institute, Mannanam) for their prompt and neat word-processing service.
