Gujarat is number 9 in most populous state and has diverse groups of people with respect to caste and religion, habitat, socioeconomic status, education level, life styles and food habits etc. Gujarat has witnessed impressive macroeconomic and industrial development. 16.63% people below poverty line as per 2013 data.

Gender inequality is known due to which the literacy rate in females is 70.26%.in urban area and 57.78 % is in rural area while males' literacy rate is 90.98% in urban area and 81.61% in rural area. Because of so many of the social indicators Gujarat dose not perform as well as other state with a similar status. Gujarat is no.15 in the amount spent on education and on the health it has no.7 among the all state of India. But now living conditions and other social indicator have improved. More children are going to school. Health care has also received more attention. Efforts have been made by the government and nongovernmental organisation to improve health care of the nation. This has been specifically targeted towards non-communicable and preventable diseases. Diabetes, cardiovascular diseases, hypertension and obesity are some of the disorders where concerted efforts are being made to create awareness. The social and human development indices go hand in hand to overcome poverty, avoid disease and make state economically stable. Despite an improvement in health coverage facilities in state, many inadequacies and deficiencies still prevail. The main aspects are unhealthy environment, ignorance, lack of awareness, insufficient resources and inaccessibility to health service. The analysis of burden of disease shows a close relationship between health and poverty. Medical facilities are insufficient with a large gap between availabilities and requirements.

The majorities of doctors and hospitals are in cities and a town, the rural populations has much lower access to health facilities. Most people get medical care from private practitioners and very less people in government hospital.

The government has introduced a number of programmes to reduce the burden of diseases as malaria, tuberculosis AIDS and non-communicable diseases (NCDs) but NCDs have not received the due attention. Acute illnesses continue to get the priority and silent killers as diabetes and hypertension are taken as mild disorders and ignored.
