ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

Research is a long and solo journey. It has a start date, but not necessarily, an end date. In this journey, one makes friends, one seeks guidance and most importantly, one seeks assurance that at the end, it is worthwhile endeavour. At some point in time, the journey becomes an end in itself. I have immensely enjoyed this process of trying to see what everyone has seen but trying to think what not many have thought. This long journey was so interesting and enjoyable because one gets such fantastic support and help at every step of the way. I would like to express my sincere gratitude to all of them.

First of all, I am extremely grateful to my research guide, Dr Bino Paul, for his valuable guidance, scholarly inputs and consistent encouragement I received throughout the research work. My initial exposure to TISS was through him. My first idea of research was around virtual organization, and he patiently taught me the subject of Social Network Analysis (SNA) – it opened up a different world to me. SNA now helps me to make sense of any type of social organization and interdependencies a little differently than when I did not know the subject. For the present study, I however changed my area of focus to complexity paradigm. Dr Paul was equally enthusiastic; and was very knowledgeable about the subject, and guided me once again along the right direction. In fact, in the first international seminar on SNA at TISS, anchored by him, there was one session devoted to integration of SNA with complexity theory. Dr Paul’s deep scholarship in various areas has always amazed me. And, the commitment and hard work that he puts in his wide range of activities is exceptional. Every time, I went to discuss with him about my progress in studies, I came back deeply enriched with newer areas of focus.

I thank Prof N Jayaram for his invaluable suggestions and concise comments at various stages of research. My study got enriched many fold by reading up authors suggested by him. A great teacher, his one course on sociology opened up the vast repertoire of the subject, and today, I enjoy reading up on the subject long after the course requirements are over. His scholarship is like sandalwood, it imbues any type of academic endeavour being undertaken by a student.

I thank Dr S Palo who extended her support and encouragement at all stages; including clarifying concepts around organisation design. I thank Dr Z Mulla, for being the discussant for the doctoral research proposal – he lead me to a very important research paper that actually opened up a new area of thought. I thank Dr E Toppo, who kindly consented to become my discussant for final seminar, despite his extremely busy schedule, and had interesting inputs to provide.

No research is possible without the Library, the Centre of learning resources. I take this opportunity to express my gratitude to all the library staff of Sir Dorabji Tata Memorial Library. During the long years of study, I used to visit TISS campus intermittently. Walking through the leafy campus, spending long hours in library soaking in the atmosphere and discovering interesting books on wide range of topics, seem to be some of the most relaxed time of my life.

The office associates at PhD office were extremely helpful and accommodative throughout my association with them. Also, having spent years in professional business setup, I must put on record the friendliness of class four staff members of TISS; the elan with which the ladies, wearing absolutely delectable sarees - their uniform - turn up for their job can give complex to airhostesses. Their cheerfulness and general air of bonhomie brought smile to my frazzled self.

I would also like to thank Prof Ranjan Das, Professor – Strategic Management, IIM (Calcutta) who first introduced me to the fascinating subject of complexity theory in 2005. This is a paradigm of thinking, which helps in understanding the universe better, and, if I may add, is more close to Indian philosophical thinking than Newtonian concepts.
Last but not the least, the management and staff of the Case Company, where the study was done were very cooperative and ready to spend time to explain how their company function. The senior member of the company took pains to explain the peculiarity of their business, and what makes for success in their company. I also profited from their well-stocked library.

It seems just the other day when I had signed up for the doctoral program. Time passes so fast. However, the journey has been very enriching for me. It has opened up many avenues of knowledge, to savour and enjoy. For a person, who started on this course towards later part of her professional career, the best take away from the study has been the pursuit of knowledge as an end in itself.
