Acknowledgements

Thanks need to be expressed, and in words: but who knows better than me how inadequate and limiting words can be?

Nevertheless, my deep gratitude goes out to:

At SNDT University

* My Research Guide Dr Sunanda Pal, Head of the University Department of English [Retd], Department of Postgraduate Studies and Research, SNDT Women’s University, Churchgate, for her encouragement, critical acumen, understanding, and patience and her gentle but firm insistence that I do not give up this research work in the face of seemingly overwhelming odds.

M’am, I owe the completion of this work almost entirely to your support. Your critical insights into post-colonial theory and discerning feedback on all aspects of my work kept me focussed, and conscious of the fact that I could not afford to slacken academically.

Thanks also for your repeated reminders that research activity is a form of tapasya, which calls for extraordinary resolution and faith.

* Prof Mitra Parekh, the Prof-in-Charge of the University Department of English for her encouragement and for her extensive erudition, which inspires all her students to give their best.

* The University RR committee and the PGSR Department, which gave me the much-needed extensions over and above the ones permissible for completing this work.

The UCG

* For the Teacher Fellowship award under the Faculty Improvement Programme, under the IX Five-Year Plan, which entitled me to Study Leave for two years and financial assistance in the form of Living Expenses and Contingency Grants.

Libraries

* The SNDT University, Smt Chandibai Himathmal Mansukhani College, The University of Mumbai, The British Council and SCILET (Study Centre for Indian Literatures in English and Translations, Madurai, for their very efficient and prompt services in making available all the reading material needed for my research.
* Principal R N Sadarangani [Retd], for his moral support and the active role he played in motivating me to apply for the UGC teacher-fellowship and in seeing me through the whole process. It is his self-effacing presence and respect for academics that grew into and remained a source of strength even well after his retirement from the College.

* Principal Dinesh Panjwani, who provided all institutional support in the form of leave, and infrastructure facilities like computers, printers, etc. in the College itself. His sharp intellectual firmness and quiet, unobtrusive empathy with my struggles in the completion of this thesis, persistently kept my faith in my work alive.

My interaction with him has taught me three vital things:
- Never give up on people and projects,
- Work outlasts people,
- Perfectionism leads to excellence, but resting on perfection kills creativity.

Thank you, Sir.

* My colleagues:

  o Close friends: Surinder Kaur Chhabbra, Retd Head of the Sociology Department, Amita Grover of the History Department, Dr Savitmita Chavan, Head of the Geography Department, Dr Shalini Saksena, Reader and Head of the History Department, for having stood by me at all times, for their genuine concern with my work and for being extremely patient, understanding and sympathetic listeners; and from the Chemistry Department, Ruby Koriakose for her prayers, and Suhasini Asokan, for having been there for more than twenty years.

  o Dr B R Joshi, the Head of the Microbiology Department for prodding me on to keep working with tenacity. Dr Milind Vaidya, the Vice-Principal of the College and Reader in the Dept of Physics, for his unflagging support. Mr Subhash Athavale, the Librarian of the College, for keeping the library well-stocked with all the books I required for my research, and for making them available to me all throughout the duration of my work. Dr Joshi and Subhash were also instrumental in keeping me abreast of the UGC procedures for my Teacher Fellowship.
What do I say about the contribution of the late Dr Neena Kocchar of the Microbiology Department? Just this, in the vein of Rainer Maria Rilke: ‘Let the rose bloom every year for her sake.’

Departmental Colleagues: Pratima Das, Dr Deepa Mishra, Janice de Souza and Tejaswini Godbole for pitching in and cooperating with the heavy departmental workload. Pratima and Deepa have also been around whenever I needed to trace a book or any other reference material, sometimes at impossibly short notices.

And, how can I fail to affirm my warmth for Ganga Mukhi - the sensitive, nurturing ‘silent friend of many distances...’?

My students whose interaction and questions in class have helped to clarify many concepts and given me a more focussed attitude towards both teaching and research.

The College Office Staff, particularly, Lata Talreja, the Registrar, Dharmendra Pirithiani, Mohan Chhatani and Kiran Panjabi, for promptly processing the required documents for the UGC Fellowship. Thanks to Haresh Bhatia, too, for the many little, seemingly insignificant tasks that he performs on a routine basis to keep the wheels moving.

Colleagues from other colleges and related areas of interest:

Prof Derek Antao [Retd. Head, Department of English, SIES College, Sion] whose interest in my work has been sustained and active; it is to him that I owe the understanding of the deeper nuances of Anglo-Indian life and culture. His analysis of The Trotternama, his unpublished manuscript ‘Laughter in the Ruins’, helped me to get a much clearer perspective of the text. It is a matter of the deepest regret for me that he did not live to see the completion of this work.

Nirupama Pai, of Somaiya Vinaymandir, for her fresh, unconventional perspective on literature, which makes an adventure of every text she interacts with. Sujata Tandel, of the Bank of India, whose years at her banking job have not diminished her involvement with literature. Pratibha Umashankar, Correspondent and Senior Editor, Khaleej Times, for her courage, her stamina and sheer audacity in her quest for the truth of language. Chandrika, intellectual adventurer, Editor and Publisher of Nurture, every child’s dream magazine, for her vigour and her ability to strike a fresh path every time.

My discussions with these friends both on literature and on larger sociological and psychological issues have contributed substantially to the formation of my intellectual makeup and sharpened my critical and analytical tools over the past thirty years.

Family:

Sohan Singh, my Mamaji, for his overwhelming support in the days of trial. My brother, Gurudarshan, for his exceptional, eccentric craving for modern literature, and for his help with the proof-reading. Pratipal, my sister, and Kulwant, my brother-in-law, for keeping my faith alive and believing in my ability to work things out. Gurjinder, my cousin, for being available at all times to help me in formatting my work on the computer – and for making my computer a friend I could rely on. Cousin Charanjit Singh Juss for being the support-system that an elder brother is expected to be.

Simran, my five-and-a-half-year-old niece, for teaching me how to endure.

Finally, Surjeet Kaur, my mother, that amazing woman who has withstood all that fell to her lot,
with grace, composure, and resilience,
- for being just what she is.
