Acknowledgements

Fundamentally, I owe this work to my teachers and the members of my family.

This Research is the result of enthusiastic and spontaneous co-operation of several persons without whose help and assistance, the completion of this thesis would have not only been difficult but impossible.

Although it is impossible to recall each and every one of those whose support and contribution has gone into this work, I shall be failing in my duty if I did not mention a few of them.

At the outset, I would like to deeply thank my guide for this work, Prof. V. P. Bhardwaj - Director, School of Social Sciences, for his continuous guidance and valuable inputs, which helped define the direction of the study. He has been a source of great inspiration throughout the length of this work as also during the early years at the School of Social Sciences, where, as a student of M.A. and M. Phil. I had the opportunity to study under him. To me, Prof. Bhardwaj is more than a guide.

Then I would like to acknowledge the ideological and inspirational role played by my parents and parents-in-law, who prompted me into believing that learning must never stop, and thus encouraged me to pursue the degree of Ph.D. even after getting married and becoming a busy mother.

Words would fail when I think of my husband’s role in accomplishing this Research. He was there with me whenever required with total devotion and involvement, and also has been constant source of inspiration. His involvement, enthusiasm and encouragement were so much overwhelming that I wonder if this work would have seen the light of this day without his active co-operation and understanding. I dedicate my study to him.
I would also like to thank Smt. Heena Desai of the Bureau of Economics and Statistics and Shri K T Vyas of IndextB who spared their valuable time and extended unconditional co-operation to the fullest extent and allowed access to their resources whenever required.

Finally I would like to thank all my family members and so many friends who have always been with me for extending their kind support and encouragement throughout the course of my research.

Last, but not least, I wish to thank my children for being so co-operative.
