ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

I would like to begin by expressing my deepest gratitude to my guide, Professor Dhawal Mehta, for providing me with constant encouragement, support and concrete suggestions all through my coursework. I would also like to thank him for his patience with my delays and always finding time for me from his busy schedule.

I am deeply indebted to Prof. Indira Parikh of the Indian Institute of Management, Ahmedabad, who not only provided much needed encouragement during the course of this study but also provided valuable moral support.

I would like to especially thank my father Dr. Prabhakar Sheth, whose lifelong support and encouragement of all my endeavours has made me the person I am today.

I am extremely grateful to Seema Ramchandani for her inputs at critical points in the proposal and analysis. The long discussions with her were of immense benefit during this difficult phase. She was to me almost a fellow traveller in the journey.

I wish to express my sincere and deep gratitude to the executives of the companies, who provided me with all the access and time necessary to write this. Here I would specially like to thank Prof. Asha Kaul of the Indian Institute of Management, Ahmedabad for her immense help and positive approach, which gave me confidence for further data collection.

My warmest thanks to Hetal Ray who typed and retyped my thesis with devotion and without any complaints.

The support I have received from Deepali Shah and my friends outside the Institute cannot be adequately acknowledged. The list is long and I cannot name all those who in their own way have been of help.

Last but not the least, special thanks to my husband Vimal and my daughter and son Anjali and Amar, who had to bear with all my ups and downs. I know that it would be futile to try to repay their affection and support.
