ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

In the course of this study, I have benefitted from the support and advice of a number of Institutions and Individuals.

At the outset I record my deep sense of appreciation and gratitude to Prof. R. Radhakrishna of Sardar Patel Institute of Economic and Social Research for his invaluable help and inspiring guidance throughout the study. With his remarkable qualities of infectious optimism and analytical acumen he was a tower of strength and support in moments of low spirits. I really do not know how words can adequately convey my feelings.

I am very much indebted to Professors Amartya Sen and Y.K. Gokhale for their keen interest and encouragement throughout the study. I have drawn in great measure on the valuable time of Dr. Atul Sarna which I cannot compensate with formal acknowledgement. I am also thankful to the Director of the Institute, his administrative and library staff for their ready help in providing facilities needed for the study.

The main support of my stay and work was the Doctoral Fellowship awarded by the Indian Council of Social Science Research, New Delhi. The keen interest shown by Dr. D.D. Sarma, Director, Indian Council of Social Science
Research in the progress of my study was indeed inspiring.

I am highly thankful to the authorities of Andhra University for giving me lien on my job to execute this research work. I record my thanks to the authorities of the Indian Institute of Management for permitting me to use their well furnished library. I used the Computer of Physical Research Laboratory and the massive data has been neatly processed with precision and patience by Shri T. Suryanarayana. I am highly indebted to him. Further, the assistance rendered by Shri C.S.R. Murty and Shri Y.V. Pantulu in this respect is invaluable. My thanks are due to Shri T. Prabakaran for typing the draft and final version of the thesis with efficiency.

A major real cost of my study was borne by my family whose forbearance for my immoderate consumption of time has been admirable.

Finally I record my sincere appreciation of the environment of the Institute which made research a rewarding experience.

February 1979

SAR Sastry