ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

This study has undoubtedly been an enriching and rewarding personal experience as much as it enabled me to rationalize my own stresses and strains, and the styles that I adopted to cope with the stress faced at various stages of this work. I am sure my ways were not always desirable or comfortable for the people around me who had to often put up with my idiosyncrasies.

I would like to take this opportunity to conscientiously thank the various people without whose encouragement, help, patience and tolerance, this study would never have been completed.

I am gratefully indebted to:

Mr. Manubhai Shrimali—who has been the principal cause of stresses and strains mentioned above. Had it not been for him I would probably not have begun this study—nor would I have completed it.

My parents—to whom I owe everything except my stresses, strains, weaknesses. The very thought of them is enough to revitalize and energize me to tide over any strain or stressful situation.

ICSSR—for enabling me to cope with my financial strains by granting me a short-term fellowship and contingency grant.

Dr. T. V. Rao and Dr. D. M. Pestonjee—for helping me to periodically relieve my stresses through their timely guidance and encouragement.

Dr. P. C. Sen—for sharing his experiences of stresses on a similar study recently done by him on public sector banks. Although considerably older in age he bore the burden with youthful cheerfulness and set an example for me to follow.

Mr. N. Dixit—my guide de facto, for instructing, tutoring and training me in the use of statistical techniques and data analysis and also tolerating and bearing the major portion of my stress, that I conveniently passed on to him.

Mr. D. Sarupria—for preparing computer programmes and clarifying my doubts and confusions at various stages of this work.

Dr. D. F. Pereira—for arranging use of computer facilities at short notice.
Ms. Parvathi Bhaskaran - for preparing computer programmes and analysing the data on priority basis, in spite of her heavy workload and busy schedule.

Dr. M. K. Singhvi - for his affectionate encouragement and painstaking efforts to help me raise this work to his high standards of perfection.

Mr. Rohit K. Prabhakar - for his warm and friendly approach while accepting the editing help inspite of his busy schedules, and patiently going through the first drafts of the thesis and suggesting changes on language and presentation aspects.

Brinda Rawal - for efficiently scoring the questionnaire on personality.

Mr. B. Shrimati - for willingly providing any facility that I required and for encouraging me during tiring and frustrating situations while completing this work.

M/s. Krishna, Udayan, Tarla and Purnima - for understanding my tight schedules and keeping me free from social gatherings, to enable me to work peacefully, for almost three years which is not a short period.

My friends and relatives - who were of immense help to me in data collection.

The respondents - for their willing and voluntary help in providing the required information, and

Mr. P. S. R. V. Prasad - for providing immaculate shape and form to the present study.
