ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

Working on this thesis has given me so much pleasure that I must begin by expressing my gratefulness to Prof. K. R. Chandrasekharan who first suggested to me that I should work on this theme. British history has fascinated me almost as much as literature has, and the opportunity to unite both these interests in one thesis attracted me the moment the suggestion was made. I am also deeply indebted to Prof. K. R. Chandrasekharan for his guidance in the initial stages of my research and for all his patience and encouragement. Dr. R. A. Malagi, head of the department of English at Gujarat University, very kindly consented to be my guide when Prof. Chandrasekharan retired, and has gone to immense trouble to make this thesis presentable. I am grateful for the meticulous attention he has given to my work and for the valuable suggestions he has made.

Mr. Christopher Fry was kind enough to reply to my letter and lend me a very useful article on Curtmantle.

Mr. Digish Mehta, reader in the department of English at Gujarat University, and Mr. B. Singh also of the department of English have been very helpful with ideas and books. Dr. P. K. Mehta of the Arts and Commerce College, Trivand, generously lent me some critical material on Christopher Fry.
I am indebted to Rev. Father F. Braganza S. J., Principal of St. Xavier's College, Ahmedabad, and the Vice-Principals, Fr. J. Braganza and Fr. D. Dias for extending all library facilities; and to Mr. P. Vegad, Librarian of St. Xavier's College for his help in borrowing books on the interlibrary loan scheme. I am also very grateful to Father Vincent Braganza for clarifying certain points of Christian theology and discussing Murder in the Cathedral with me; and to Father Mendosa for lending me some books.

Many of my friends have gone to a great deal of trouble to help me collect my material. To Nikhil Desai I owe a very large debt for locating and sending me the primary texts by Meyer, Aubrey de Vere and Laurence Binyon, together with other critical articles. Sumati Nair, Bina Kolah, Anita Prochazka, and Dr. Eberhard and Mrs. Barbara Fischer were also very helpful with books and articles. My friend, Dr. Amina Amin has helped out with a lot of practical advice about the typing, binding and presentation of the thesis.

My debt to my teacher and friend Dr. Suguna Ramanathan is too great to be adequately expressed. She has expended an enormous amount of time and effort in reading the drafts and making several necessary amendments. I am also grateful to her for a brief initial but very helpful bibliography which started me off, for constant help in lending me books and for all her generous encouragement.

Finally, I must thank my parents, Tehmesp and Jhini Khambatta without whose help this thesis could never have been written. For all their sacrifices, their support, their constant encouragement and their book-hunting expeditions on my behalf, I can never be sufficiently grateful. To my bother Adil I owe my initial acquaintance with the novel of Shelley Mydans; and to my uncle, Brigadier H. M. Thacker I am grateful for sending me books from London.
