References

Champoux JJ. Mechanism of the reaction catalyzed by the DNA untwisting enzyme: attachment of the enzyme to 3' – terminus of the nicked DNA. J Mol Biol.118;441-6,1978.

Hensel M, Schneeweiss A, Sinn HP: P53 is the strongest predictor of survival in high risk primary breast cancer patients undergoing high-dose
Significance of molecular markers in carcinoma of breast chemotherapy with autologous blood stem cell support. Int J Cancer 100; 290-6, 2002.

Howes GP, Stephenson J, Humphreys S. Sensitive and reliable PCR and sequencing used to detect p53 point mutations in fine needle aspirates of the breast. J Clin Pathol. 49; 570-573, 1996.

Significance of molecular markers in carcinoma of breast

Significance of molecular markers in carcinoma of breast

Kermer P, Krajewska M, Zapata JM, Takayama S, Mai J, Krajewski S and Reed JC. Bag1 is a regulator and marker of neuronal differentiation Cell Death and Differentiation. 9, 405-413, 2002 Nature Publishing Group

Significance of molecular markers in carcinoma of breast

Significance of molecular markers in carcinoma of breast

Osheroff N. Biochemical basis for the interactions of type I and type II topoisomerasers with DNA. Pharmacol. Ther. 41; 223-41, 1989.

Significance of molecular markers in carcinoma of breast

Song Yah, Gu Li-hung, Guan Yang, Chen Hao, Lee Amedee. "BAG-1 protein in the skin malignant melanoma of the skin lesions of expression and P53, Bcl-2 relations Chinese J of Der 41;3,180-182

Stern DF, Heffernan PA, Weinberg RA. p185, a product of the neu protooncogene, is a receptorlike protein associated with tyrosine kinase activity. Mol Cell Biol. 6;1729-1740, 1986

Significance of molecular markers in carcinoma of breast

Therese P, Murray, Wakamiya G, Askaa K, Jon DVM, Huang, Dennis DVM, Welcher, Rosanne, Pii, Kurt MA, Craig AD. Development of

Significance of molecular markers in carcinoma of breast

Significance of molecular markers in carcinoma of breast

