ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

One always finds it difficult to express feelings of gratitude toward one’s benefactors and friends. Although the words would not suffice it, I am expressing my deep sense of gratitude to my supervisor Dr. Akbar Husain, who has been source of great inspiration to me during my Ph.D programme. His unfailing guidance, coupled with deep understanding of the subject have contributed heavily in the writing of this thesis. He deserves my silent admiration as well as eloquent expression of his enviable qualities.

Professor Afzal Kureshi, Chairman, Department of Psychology has been kind and helpful during Ph.D. course, and it gives me immense pleasure in acknowledging his valuable suggestions.

I am highly thankful to all teachers and students of different faculties and departments who readily accepted acting as subjects for this study.

A few words of thanks however, seem to be quite inadequate for expressing my feelings for my parents, sisters, and brothers (Dr. Javaid Iqbal and Mr. Masood A. Baig) who gave me full financial support for my studies at Aligarh, and whose affection and concern for my academic achievement encouraged me to complete the present work in a relatively short span of time.

I cherish the encouragement received from all the teachers of the department. The cooperation and encouragement received from my friends is gratefully acknowledged.

Mr. Suhail Ahmad deserves many thanks for typing the manuscript.
