PREFACE

In writing this thesis entitled "The Role of the United Nations For Peace With Special Reference to West Asia", I have been greatly benefited by my stay and frequent visits to the United Nations as my country representative in the General Assembly Sessions and its affiliated Committees since 1966. I represented also my country in other United Nations Conferences at the Hague, Geneva, Vienna and some West Asian capitals, where I got the opportunity of studying on-the-spot the system of this world Organisation. This certainly gave me an insight into the problems of the United Nations. The present thesis is a humble attempt to study the potentialities and problems confronting the United Nations with a view to analyse its role for consolidating world peace and progress. I regret my inability to take up more fully some Arab political questions, which the United Nations had to cope with such as the problem of Tunisian and Moroccan independence, Algerian struggle for liberation, the Buraimi dispute, etc., on account of lack of time and space. I believe these can be the subjects of independent research.

I am grateful to the United Nations Information Office and Officials of Hammarskjold Library in New York, the United Nations Development Programme Office in Aden and Colleagues in the Ministry of Foreign Affairs in my country, People's Democratic Republic of Yemen for rendering me much help and assistance concerning important research materials. I am also much grateful to my Government and to the Government of India particularly the former Minister of Education, Professor S. Nurul Hasan, for the award of a cultural exchange scholarship which financially supported me very much during my stay in India.

I offer also my thanks to a number of friends in New York, Geneva, Vienna, New Delhi, Beirut and Cairo without mentioning their names separately for their sympathy and suggestions.

For the completion of this work, I have a debt of gratitude to my Supervisor, Professor S.A.H. Haqqi, Head, Department of Political Science, and the Dean, Faculty of Social Sciences, Aligarh Muslim University, Aligarh, without whose guidance, help and ceaseless encouragement this work would have never seen the light of the day. He, in spite of his preoccupations allowed me to frequently encroach upon his valuable time and encourage me in my moments of difficulty. I have great pleasure in acknowledging my profound gratitude to him for the completion and submission of this thesis within the minimum permissible time-limit.

I should also extend my thanks to Mr. M.A. Khan Afridi for typing the manuscript nicely and carefully.

And at last, I should feel gratitude to my wife, Asma, and my children, who suffered on account of this study but very cheerfully tolerated the hardship of my being away from them for a long time.
