Nations, like people, rarely take a decisive step forward. Instead, they take a long succession of smaller steps which move them, often imperceptibly, in new directions. This is true of India. The nation rebounded from economic crises with a vigorous economy and a change in the business environment. It also discovered in the process that its future did not lie solely in its tight isles. This work bears the imprint of those individuals, and their ideas, who made the nation realise that there is always another way of looking at the world and of seeing it anew.

I owe a great debt to Prof. Azhar Kazmi, Chairman, Department of Business Administration, Aligarh Muslim University, under whose guidance and supervision this study has matured. Prof. Kazmi was a valued source of commentary and advice. He commented perceptibly on the entire manuscript, at times under the constraints of various other professional preoccupations. Innumerable discussions with him increased my understanding of Business Policy and Strategic Management, and stimulated my thinking in many other areas of Business Management.

I have received considerable encouragement and help from Prof. Nafees Baig, Dean, Faculty of Commerce, AMU; Prof. Najmul Hasan, former Dean, Faculty of Commerce, AMU; and Prof. S.M. Ozair, former Chairman, Department of Business Administration, AMU; and other faculty members of the Department. I express my sincere gratitude to all of them.

My colleagues at the Department of Business Administration, AMU, were especially supportive of my efforts. For this support, I thank Mr Ashraf Nairn, Lecturer at the Department of Business Administration, and Dr Sirajuddin Ahmed, now Associate Professor of Management in Bangladesh. I owe a great debt to Ms Shephali Haldia, now with the PHD Chamber of Commerce and Industry, New Delhi, for encouraging me in times of desperation. She played a pivotal role in the completion of this study by sparing her valuable time in assisting me during the collection of relevant data and compilation of bibliography.

The Department of Business Administration, AMU, lent a unique peaceful setting in which this study was conceptualised. For one researching in Business Policy, the Department helped considerably in completing this work by way of granting Research Fellowship.

The genesis of this study was my research which began with the pre-doctoral (M. Phil.) dissertation on 'Impact of Liberalisation Measures on Selected Industries'. However, the finale would not have been possible but for the valuable stock of information at the libraries of American Center, New Delhi; Delhi School of Economics; Federation of Indian Chambers of Commerce and Industry (FICCI), New Delhi; Institute of Economic Growth, Delhi; and PHD Chamber of Commerce and Industry.
Commerce and Industry (PHDCCI), New Delhi. I am indebted to the respective librarians for extending full facilities to work in the library. I must also compliment the efforts of a highly talented and educated group of business journalists who have indirectly lent their ideas to my efforts.

A number of my colleagues and professional acquaintances were also helpful in numerous ways. I have learned about the personal challenges, and pressures and pleasures of managerial life through a special acquaintance with Mr M.L. Nandrajog, Secretary General of PHD Chamber of Commerce and Industry. I have found my indebtedness to him difficult of requital. Those who contributed insightful comments or suggestions include Dr D.N. Saxena, former Director General, Indian Institute of Foreign Trade (IIFT); Mr T.K. Bhaumik, Senior Policy Advisor, Confederation of Indian Industry (CII); and Mr P.K. Mitra, Secretary (International Affairs), PHD Chamber of Commerce and Industry. I am grateful to all of them.

Words of encouragement from a senior friend Dr Shadab A. Khan, and the help rendered and concern shown by his wife Nargis Alam, leaves me with many debts. Thanks are also due to Mrs. Zeba Kazmi and Ms Rohini Bhushan for constantly encouraging me during the course of my study. I also sincerely appreciate the perennial cooperation given by Mr M. Assadullah, Manager, Syndicate Bank, AMU, Aligarh.
First on my list of personal acknowledgements are the loved ones who stuck by me, sacrificed for me and supported me while I struggled towards completing this work. My sisters Mrs Tahmeena Ashraf and Ms Afreen Washkoor, and my brother-in-law Dr Ashraf Saeed, presently at the University of Alabama in Birmingham, USA, always encouraged me in my academic pursuits. Their affection is difficult to be reciprocated.

Among many, two of my biggest well-wishers who always took keen interest in my academic pursuits are unfortunately not present by the time this work has been completed. My uncles, late Mohd Izhar Hussain and late Habib A. Siddiqui, were a source of inspiration to me. I cannot resist to recall their love and affection showered on me.

Words cannot express my deepest thanks and gratitude to Ammi and Abbu without whose love and blessings, this endeavour would have never been completed. Few but they know the trials and tribulations of undertaking research in a virgin area. To their patience and sacrifice, and affection and understanding, I dedicate this work to them.

A special word of thanks is due to Mr Rahat Hasan. He worked hard in pursuit of that elusive goal -- a neat manuscript in a very short time.

This acknowledgement would remain incomplete without the mention of my deceased brothers, Javed A. Siddiqui and Junaid A. Siddiqui, as I miss them more at every momentous event of my life.
