ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

'No man is an island.' To the common eye, a thesis may seem to be a mere thesis, but for its writer it is much more. He only knows how it is made. His own labour—the pains of his labour, active co-operation and suggestions of others, financial assistance, material aid and what not, are involved in giving it a proper shape. He particularly recalls, with gratitude, the immense co-operation he receives from all quarters in completing the research project. It is my humble duty, therefore, to express thankfulness to those who were of help in the preparation of the thesis.

Most of all, I feel elated in acknowledging the debt of Dr. J.L. Agrawal, Head, Department of Commerce, Government College, Dhamtari, who inspired me to undertake this work and who, as my patron, encouraged me all the while in this academic pursuit.

I humbly reserve the words of deep gratitude and obligation to my revered supervisor Dr. G.C. Singhai, Principal Government College, Rehali, who has not only given me personal attention but has taken utmost pains in getting the draft of the thesis prepared. It is his unflinching and scholarly guidance; I am sure, that gives it the form.
I owe a great debt to Dr. C.S. Mishra, Head, Department of Economics, Ravishankar University Raipur, who was kind enough in providing me facility of using the library of the Department. He took keen interest in my progress. His scholarly and humanitarian approach to things inspired the flame of research in me all the time.

I extend my profound thanks to Dr. Smt. Usha Dubey, Reader, Department of Economics, Ravishankar University Raipur, for providing useful practical guidance throughout this period.

I can not adequately express my sincere thanks and gratitude to Dr. Hanumant Yadav, Department of Economics, Ravishankar University, Raipur who, inspite of his busy hours, spared time for me and offered very useful suggestions whenever needed.

Thanks are also due to Dr. K.B. Das, Shri V.P. Mishra, Dr. A.K. Pandey and Ku. N. Shrivastava for their extended co-operation.

I do not find words to express my deep sense of gratitude to Dr. D.K. Marothia, Associate Professor and Scientist, Agriculture University Raipur, whose suggestions were of immense help for me in selection of research methodology and analysis of data.
I want to put on record the co-operation of my senior colleague Prof. M.A. Khandekar, Head, Department of Economics, Government College Dhamtari, who took the pains of going through the manuscript and suggested useful corrections.

I feel highly indebted to the library staff of Sunder Lal Sharma Library, Ravishankar University Raipur, Sagar University Library and Servants of India Society Library Pune. Mr. P.B. Paradkar, Librarian, Government College Dhamtari, also provided material help for me.

I wish to express my gratitude to the authorities of State Department of Irrigation for providing me necessary information regarding irrigation schemes in Bastar district. Shri M.C. Wahi, S.D.O. (Irrigation) Charama, particularly took interest in my work and extended active co-operation during field investigation. Hence, special thanks are due to him.

I sincerely thank University Grants Commission, New Delhi for sanctioning short term teacher fellowship which enabled me to manage the field investigation in time.

I am very much obliged and indebted to my colleagues and friends for their help, inspiration and advice.
The work would not have been possible without the co-operation of the sample farmers. I am indebted to them for sharing with me their experiences about agriculture and irrigation.

I am also thankful to Mr. P.L. Laheri who managed the typing work efficiently.

Lastly, perhaps much more than the usual debt of gratitude must be expressed to Anu, the equal partner in my every success, who, with my daughter Richa and son Rahul, has patiently put up with my eccentricities during the trying period of more than four years.
