ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

For the guidance and encouragement which Professor Mohammad Shabbir Khan, Head of the Department of Economics, Aligarh Muslim University, so willingly gave me during the course of my research, I am deeply indebted to him. But for his interest in the subject and in the progress of the present work, it could hardly have been completed. I am also thankful to Mr. M.A. Raz, Dr. Waheeduddin Khan and other colleagues in the Department of Economics, A.M.U., Aligarh with whom I had many a fruitful discussion on the subject. Needless to point out that they are in no way responsible for any defects that might have remained in this study.

Lastly, my thanks are due to Mr. Latafatullah Khan, who cheerfully undertook the monotonous task of typing out this dissertation.

M. N. Siddiqi