Acknowledgements

First of all, I would like to extend my heartfelt thanks to my supervisor, Dr Utpal Kumar De, for his sincere guidance and painstaking correction of my thesis. Along with this, I am also grateful to Atul Chandra Goswami, retired head of the department of Economics, M. C. College, Barpeta for his thoughtful suggestions and also for his helping attitude in expression and for his ideas as well.

Again, I am obliged to the staff of libraries of K. D. Library, M. C. College, North-Eastern Hill University, Gauhati University, Dibrugarh University, Assam Agriculture University for giving me permission to use their books and journals. Moreover, I am indebted to Directorate of Economics and Statistics, Government of Assam, Directorate of Sericulture, Government of Assam; Central Silk Board (North East), Government of India, Office of the Commissioner of Custom, Government of India, Shillong, Eri Research Station, Mendipathar, Meghalaya; ARTFED for supplying me secondary facts and data.

I convey my sincere thanks to the Sericulturist and Artisans of Barpeta district who have helped me a lot in supplying primary data and providing a detailed and practical knowledge on this rich culture.

I am grateful to Mrs. De, Maumita Bhattacharjee for her co-operation and sacrifice of valuable family time.

I am also indebted to all the Faculties of the Department of Economics, NEHU, Shillong and Principal and my colleagues of M. C. College for their sincere co-operation.

I am ever grateful to my parents and father and mother-in-laws for their blessings and also my wife Tarali Nayak and my son Upaman for their constant inspiration and sacrifice.

Last but not the least; I would be ever grateful to my friends, especially Suniti Ranjan Das for helping me in typing and for their motivation.

If some of these contributions have not been acknowledged in the text, I hope that I would be forgiven for unknown and unforeseen human oversight.
